

THE SLAIN DICTATOR OF THE DELTA: HUEY LONG IN PICTURES

HUEY LONG AND THE FAMILY HE LEAVES BEHIND—The toga-ed dictator of the bayous, fatally shot by Dr. Carl A. Weiss Jr. in the Louisiana state capitol, as he appeared on a visit to New York with Mrs. Long, their daughter, Rose, and one of their sons, Palmer.
(Associated Press photo.)

HIS LAST PICTURE—The senator on the dais before the speaker's desk in the Louisiana house of representatives a few moments before he was shot down in the corridor by the young eye specialist, whom Long bodyguards subsequently riddled with bullets.
(Associated Press photo.)

NEWLYWED—Huey Long and his bride in a 1913 picture. He then was a cottonseed oil salesman; she had won a Long-sponsored cake-baking contest.
(Acme photo.)

THE SALESMAN, 1911—Vending a substitute for lard, he ranged through southern states giving demonstrations to farmers' wives.
(Acme photo.)

THE MAN WHO GAVE BLOOD TO HIS CHIEF FOR A TRANSFUSION—Senator Long with Lieut. Gov. James Noe during a visit to New York.
(Associated Press photo.)

(TRIBUNE photo.)

(Acme photo.)

(Associated Press photo.)

(Associated Press photo.)

CLOSEUPS—During the Democratic national convention; dictating to Louisiana legislators; posing for newspaper photographers in Washington; being interviewed by reporters.