By John Herrick

ROOSEVELTISM has claimed its United States of America. Nine months of the New Deal have defined it clearly in the affections of the voters, of government.

As the voters see it, there is no longer need for the voiced suspicion of the New Deal. It is a New Deal, with the chief requirement for participation a willingness to abide by the New Rules. He who will play in the Federal is welcome, regardless of past allegiance.

The old Democracy of the Jeffersonians has been subordinated by hope for a revolution, toward the building of which the soul of leaders of New Thought in Government is

THE DYNASTIC ROOSEVELTS AND THE ROOSOCRATIC PARTY

By the same token, the rising-sun campaign of the New Deal has made the New Deal a part of American history. The nation has been broken, and the grade-school pupil knows of the heights reached by the T. R. branch of the family and is beginning to realize these sought by FDR, father of the NRA, the FHA, the AAA.

Because of the trend of the times at the White House, the deeds of great problem, the vote once of the day, have been

(Continued on Page Four)