These are babies with new homes awaiting them. Each child pictured here is under the care of one of three Chicago institutions—the Illinois Children's Home and Aid society, St. Vincent's hospital, and the Chicago Foundlings' home, and after thorough investigation may be approved for adoption by a family which has been selected most carefully from a long waiting list. Child placement today is a problem, not of finding homes for babies, but of finding babies that are suitable for adoption, so far does the demand for them exceed the supply.
