Walleye plantings yield ‘good and bad’ news

There was a bit more good news last week in re- sults of the Fish and Game Department’s Walleye plantings conducted in the Kalamazoo River near Summer Bay. The planting was conducted on July 10, and a total of 8,400 walleyes were released. The good news was that the walleyes appeared to be swimming around the lake and being fed upon by other fish, which is a sign of good health. The bad news was that many of the walleyes were found in the lower part of the lake near Summer Bay, and they did not appear to be swimming as far up the river as in previous years. This could be due to the presence of other fish, such as carp, that are more aggressive feeders.

A week earlier, there had been reports that the walleyes were not moving as far up the river as in previous years. This was confirmed when a biologist from the Fish and Game Department conducted a survey of the lake and found that the walleyes were not as abundant as in previous years. The biologist suggested that this could be due to the presence of other fish, such as carp, that are more aggressive feeders.
