Caseville's new $7.2 million sewage system and wastewater treatment facility is becoming a reality, as contractors started to work on the project last week.

And official groundbreaking ceremonies are scheduled this Friday, Nov. 2 at 12 noon at the Caseville Municipal Harbor, according to village officials. The harbor area was chosen for the groundbreaking ceremonies because it will be the site of the main pump station.

The sewage system will include three sewage treatment lagoons and about 15 miles of sanitary sewer, according to Caseville DPW Supervisor Bob Peter. The treatment facility was mandated by the Department of Natural Resources after studies showed that some residents had sewage going directly from their septics systems, through the drain fields, and into the Pigeon River.

Financing for the project will come from a $2.86 million bond and $1.4 million grant from the Farmers Home Administration, and a $2.9 million loan from the Environmental Protection Agency.

The loans will be repaid from proceeds of revenue bonds previously sold by the Village, Peter said.

Sewage will be pumped to the lagoons, located on the Pigeon River off W. Kinloch Road, Peter said. There, bacteria and algae in the lagoon will work to break down the sewage.

Previously, state water control officials have said odor from the lagoons should only be noticeable in the spring, when ice formed during the winter on the surface of the lagoon begins to break up and the water begins to turn over.

Peter said some limited treatment of the lagoon water will take place, and the treated water will be discharged into the Pigeon River.

The three lagoons have a capacity of 57 million gallons, which is about 15 percent above the capacity actually needed for the village's needs, Peter noted. He said that the system should be limited use by Sept. 1, 1991, but that the rate of construction of the water will depend on the weather.

Leno Construction of Caseville is the contractor for the sewer lines, and Angelo-Infinite Connection of Warren will be building the lagoons.

The battle for a new water system in Caseville Town- ship will go on as the issue moves, but opponents of the project are sure the war isn't over yet.

Officials from the township water committee shelved those plans last week, citing lack of support for the proj- ect among township resi- dents.

Township leaders wanted to extend water service from the Village of Caseville's water treatment plant into Caseville Township as a way of providing residents with a source of water comparable to residents and improve the overall quality of the production.

Officials said water quality in the township has de- riorated and that increased residential growth would require a water system.

Residents would have been charged $37 per front foot for each benefited lot, offi- cials said, and agricultural land would have been exempt. A $650 capital charge and a $600 connection fee would have been paid for each resident hooking into the system.

Each user would have been charged $62 per quarter for those gallons, the same as village residents.

Costs were one of the main reasons the plan was shelved. Many residents protested that the costs would have been too high for the many senior citizens living in the township.

Other residents said they simply didn't think the new water system was needed, that their well water was satisfactory. Township officials had said that costs could have been spread over a 25-year period, making the costs easier to handle.

Opponents, spearheaded by Bob and Barb Engleman, sponsored a petition drive aimed at stopping the proposed project, sever township attorney Mike Otto gave an opinion saying that a water referendum could not be legally held.

Vesil Cullum, a member of the township water commit- tee, said that the board didn't have the necessary signa- tures of 51 percent of the township's property owners to proceed with the project and its proposed route.

"The engineering study and other data from the project would be made available free to anyone who would like to see it," Cullin said in a release.

Barb Engleman, whogather- ed signatures on petitions against the project, said she was "shocked" when she learned the proj- ect had been shelved.

But she warned, "They can bring it up again anytime. It could be months from now and the petitions. I imagine they'll bring it up again in six months."

Her husband, Bob, said that township officials had exaggerated claims that the EPA would be checking priv- ate wells and municipal water systems.

"Politicians can manipu- late things and get projects going and the taxpayers pay for them," he said. "I'm glad it's been shelved."

"They've been giving dif- ferent reasons like water quality, but that's untrue. They're trying to scare people and the people didn't fall for it."

A new dues structure was presented to the Pigeon Chamber of Commerce and accepted by the members present at the group's quarterly meeting last Thursday at the Pigeon State Library.

President Rhonda Buchler introduced a new classifications system, raising dues, number of employees, and business classification.

"It is our hope that we can pursue additional chamber members if we have an equiva- lent dues system," Buchler explained. "The way it has been in the past, our Chamber would have no way of seeking additional members because we had no real sys- tem for determining a fair dues rate for a business."

"Now we hope to approach businesses who should be chamber members but aren't, plus we can open up new classes of chamber membership to churches, non-profit groups, farmers, etc."

Although the dreaded Zebra Mussel have been showing up in the lower Great Lakes for several years - and some appeared in Lake Huron early during the past summer - Saginaw Bay had been considered free so far.

No more. Last week, Bay Port Fish Company crew members found the first of the mussels on a net anchor while lifting nets.

The worst/some little beasts are held here by Dan Terrier, longtime Bay Port fisherman. He says Zebras are about the size of a small fingernail.

Not only U.S. government agencies, but similar governmental groups in other foreign countries, are working to find remedies to eliminate or reduce Zebra Mussel populations.

For many years I owned a Smith-Corona portable typewriter. I was not a great typist, nor was I a bookworm. I just played around with it as time allowed. The actual keyboard had a loud, annoying, clacking sound which I found offensive. It was my choice to keep it and use it. I was not going to let my checkbook decide what I used. It was “me” who bought it years before. I just decided to keep it and use it. I was happy with the keyboard sound. It was my choice to keep it and use it.

But then, one day, something happened to change my mind. I was doing some typing and suddenly the clacking sound stopped. I looked down at the keys and saw that the sound was coming from the keyboard. I decided that it didn’t matter if it didn’t work, if “me” could still type, that was good enough. So I went to the store and bought a new keyboard. I was happy with the new keyboard. It was my choice to keep it and use it.

But then, one day, something happened to change my mind. I was doing some typing and suddenly the quiet sound stopped. I looked down at the keys and saw that the sound was coming from the keyboard. It began 85 years ago when First Wesleyan Church was founded in the Western Township Area. The Community Wesleyan Church, its 85th anniversary this year, will celebrate the milestone with a variety of events over the weekend. Several hundred attend the service, according to Community Pastor, Rev. Collett Smith. The Chancel Choir, consisting of 50 people, will provide the music. The 10:15 a.m. service, held in cooperation with Community Church, will include a Fellowship Hall, kitchen, five classrooms, pastor’s study, nursery, and secretarial office. The sanctuary is located in the new church on Whalan Street near Highland. There are also two buildings in the area, including a large fellowship hall, which is used for worship services. The sanctuary sits in the old church, where balloons and flowers were used to decorate the room. There are about 200 people in attendance, including some who have been wild students. The service will also feature a special guest, Mr. and Mrs. Artur Polonsky, a former Wesleyan pastor. The service is free to the public.
