Born Under The Wrong Star
By DUANE GUENTHER

I am a pessimist. Some say you're not born that way, but must work very hard to achieve the status, and it is important to be reinforced at the proper moments.

I'm not sure about the born part, for I have been a pessimist as long as I can remember, and although I can't prove it, I'm positive I was born under the wrong star.

I am so bad, that a former boss and friend created a mythical organization called The Domsday Society of America, and ceremoniously made me the president of the Upper Thumb Chapter. I take a lot of ribbing about being a "card carrying" member, but it doesn't bother me much as I am constantly reinforced of my position.

The funny thing is, that most of my bad luck seems to come when I'm enjoying, or trying to enjoy, my outdoor activities.

You see, I am the guy who is caught under the barbed wire fence when the biggest rooster of the day flushes within gun range.

Or, whenever a big buck approaches my deer stand it always comes in behind my right shoulder making it next to impossible to move the gun or bow into a proper shooting position without alerting the entire woods of my intentions.

Also, it always seems that the biggest trout of the day comes just after I forgot to check the leader knot.

So why am I a confirmed pessimist? Because if there is something to go wrong, it is bound to happen to me. Like the ski trip Sweetwife and I planned over the New Year's holiday. The last Sunday in December was a perfect beginning for a week of skiing.

The snow-starved landscape of northern Michigan had been first drenched in a freezing rain the day before, but as we rounded the bend at the bottom of Saginaw Bay and pointed the car in a northerly direction, the snowflakes came fast and furious. What began as a leisure 3-hour trip to the Lewiston area, turned into a torturous, and sometimes hazardous, drive.

We were heading for a relatively new bed and breakfast located southeast of Gaylord in some of the finest cross country skiing that Michigan has to offer. Sweetwife had found information on the Lakeview Hills Inn in the slick pages of the latest Michigan Living Magazine and had secretly called for reservations 3 weeks in advance.

She was fortunate that another couple had cancelled the day before, and the girl on the other end of the phone promised that we would love our accommodations for the holidays.

The weather turned the landscape into a picture-postcard scene when we finally turned off the expressway and followed County Road 612 in an easterly direction. The big snowflakes that had annoyingly pelted my windshield for the last several hours became more friendly in the wooded setting, and by the time we reached Lewiston more than 6 inches lay softly nestled on the ground.

We found our turnoff on Fleming Road and I heard Sweetwife's breath catch in her throat when she caught sight of the rustic lodge perched on the breath-taking overlook.

We negotiated the steep, winding drive leading to the lodge, parked the car and soon stood in the empty dining room looking for someone to help us.

"Are you my guest?" A voice said from behind us.

"I certainly hope so," I countered. Remember, I'm a "card carrying" pessimist.

She asked our name, and when I gave it to her, a slight frown crossed her brow and without another word she disappeared into another room and we were alone again.

When our waiting time pushed towards 20 minutes I began to worry. I stuck my head through the open upper portion of a double dutch door and spotted our mystical hostess leaning over a ledger book on her desk. Her head was slowly shaking back and forth.

"Give it to me quick," I asked, partly in jest.

"You don't have reservations," she said flatly, but at the same moment I peered over her shoulder and spotted the name "Guenther" penciled in under the Sunday, December 30 column.

I looked at Sweetwife just as a big tear welled in the corner of her eye.

Barber tools give this man new start

DEAR PERCY ROSS: I read your column in the Huntington Herald Dispatch (W.V.) every Sunday, but I've never read where you help any men. It's always women and teenage girls. I understand it is your money, but how about me? I'm a man. I do not drink, gamble, swear or beat my wife, I never sexually abused my daughter when she was growing up. I'm a born-again Christian, and I do not approve of any of these things. I've been married 44 years and have never cheated or mistreated my wife.

Due to several surgeries, I had to take four years off work, and now I'm trying to make a comeback.

elderly or single parents. You say I only help women and teenage girls. Since you are none of these, and if I do help you, does that make you an exception to the rule? Heck no, because there are no rules! There are only worthy individuals, such as potential wage-earning barbers. A $568 check with which to purchase the tools of your trade is on the way!

MR. ROSS: I have asked you several times for help (on different things) and I can't believe you turned me down each time. Lately I can't help wonder if you pick your "yes" responses at random or if you actually read your letters.

When I started writing you, all I needed was money to get a used bed. I was very sick at the time, and my story could have been checked through the Suffolk County Department of Social Services. Don't bother to check now, because I'm in jail and nothing is the same.

Today all I ask for is $100 to spend at the prison commissary. I have no funds to buy deodorant, toothpaste, soap, pens, paper (I had to borrow this) or snacks. Our last meal is at 4 p.m. I have hunger pains all night unless I get something to eat from the other men on my floor. The only way I get extra food is if I do things that go against my grain. I'm not asking for much, but whatever you send would be a great help. Maybe you could just send me a letter even if I denied to let me know one way or the other.—MR. A.C., Yaphank, N.Y.

DEAR MR. ROSS: You're full of self-pity, you're bored and you're preoccupied with food. That's how I initially viewed your request, but quite honestly I can't turn you down. I'm sending a $100 postal order to be deposited in your inmate account. Perhaps with this little added boost, your self-esteem will be raised and you will begin thinking of productive ways to utilize your time. As long as you're alive, you will make choices. It is my hope that you will start making some good ones. —$$$$$$$$—

DEAR MR. ROSS: After 35 years of marriage, the bulk of the arguments between me and my husband have been over money. My husband puts every cent in the bank and leaves it there unless he wants something. He never carries cash because he might spend it. Our furniture is secondhand—all of it given to us by someone else. All of my clothes have come from secondhand stores. I'm not even allowed to do the grocery shopping. I have to fight for every dime I do get from him. He has all the bank accounts, credit cards, stocks and bonds in his name. I will see this money only after he dies.

My friends all stopped asking me to go to lunch or shopping years ago because they know I never have any money.

It's really quite embarrassing. My sons give me a little money on the side, but they have families of their own and really can't afford to do this. I would appreciate it if you could send me $500 so I could set up a savings account and establish credit in my own name. I'm practically in tears over this but would be so happy to get $500 from you.—MRS. J.L., Seattle, Wash.

DEAR MRS. L.: If you think your husband is tight with a buck, you'll be surprised to learn I'm even tighter. I could never give you $500, just so you could have a little spending money. What I will give you is some sound advice: Get a part-time job. And you won't have to sob. If you want money to burn you can earn, earn, earn! —$$$$$$$$—

Outdoor Report

January 15, 1991

Ice fishing has been rated good to excellent during most of last week in several spots along the west side of the Thumb. Ice conditions have improved steadily, and although there are still plenty of bad spots, most of the inner Bay is covered and completely safe for this highly popular winter sport.

Perch have been hitting off Quanicassaw, Sebewaing, Rose Island, Geiger Road, and Sand Point. Most anglers have been using the trusty Russian Hook with plenty of local variations and success has come in the form of 8 to 9 inch "yellow-bellies". Those persistent fishermen have often been rewarded with some fish in the 10 to 11 inch class, but they are the exception rather than the rule.

Several fishermen have taken walleyes while jigging for perch. Some have been of decent size, but for the most part, the walleyes are rather small.

Signs of an upturn in the Thumb's pheasant population were evident this hunting season with hunter success being the best in several years. As the cold weather and deep snow covered the farmland, we are reminded of the bird numbers when they appear at many roadsides to glean for gravel needed to grind the food in their crops.

Both sportsmen and bird lovers can help this majestic specimen by slowing your vehicle down when nearing birds along the side of the road.

Cross country ski conditions are near perfection at both Sleeper and Port Crescent State Parks. Groomed trails and plenty of snow have made both places popular attractions during the past week. Port Crescent managed to pull off one of its "candlelight" evenings last Saturday, and was rewarded with well over a hundred people. By the sounds of the squeals coming off the wooded trails and the oohs and aahs from around the huge campfire, everyone seemed to be enjoying themselves.

AIDS prevention her top priority

By AMY HEIDEN

Statistics say that within 10 years, every person in the United States will know someone whose life has been touched by AIDS.

It may be a family member or a friend or a friend's friend, but everyone will be touched in some way.

And here in Huron and Sanilac Counties, Janice Clark is working to educate people about the disease.

For two years, she's been speaking to various civic and school groups, spelling out the facts and trying to dispel the myths surrounding AIDS.

Clark is the AIDS Coordinator for the Huron and Sanilac Health Departments, dividing her time between the two counties. In her position, she not only makes presentations, she's responsible for confidential AIDS testing and referrals and counseling.

The job of coordinator fell right into Clark's area of expertise.

She is a registered nurse, and two years ago she was working in home health care, and during that time she came into contact with AIDS patients.

When the position of coordinator for the two counties became available, she jumped at the chance.

The statistics on AIDS are frightening, and will only get worse without a massive education effort, Clark says.

"Statistically, there is no AIDS in Huron County," she says, but the laws governing reporting is changing so that the statistical county picture will be more accurate.

"Right now, there are 155,000 people dead or dying from AIDS. In Michigan there are 2,000 people dead or in the final stages of the disease, 55% of them in Detroit or Wayne County," Clark says.

"There are one to three million people diagnosed as HIV positive, and that number doubles every year. Five to ten million are carrying the virus and don't know it."

Even though the majority of AIDS cases are in the larger cities, Clark says it's a major mistake to believe that its spread will stop at the Huron County line.

"Our main connection with the city is drugs. People come up here in the summer, they come up for hunting, and some bring their drugs with them," she explained.

Drugs play a big role in the spread of the disease, she says, because users not only share contaminated needles, but the drugs loosen inhibitions and users may have unprotected sex, engaging in behavior they normally wouldn't engage in, Clark says.

All AIDS testing is done confidentially, and no names are ever given or written down, Clark says.

"All the testing is done anonymously. We assign a code number, and only I have access to it," she says. But even with the security safeguards, some people are hesitant about contacting the health department.

"They fear that their name will get into the system and they'll be identified," Clark notes. "No names are ever used."

In Clark's role as an educator about AIDS, she asked to speak to school groups. Those students in the groups

Marine Pvt. Michael J. Isham, son of David L. and Susan I. Isham of Caseville, has completed recruit training at Marine Corps Recruit Depot, San Diego, Calif.

During the 13-week training cycle, Isham was taught the basics of battlefield survival. He was introduced to the typical daily routine he will experience during his enlistment and studied the personal and professional standards traditionally exhibited by Marines.

He participated in an active physical conditioning program and gained proficiency in a variety of military skills, including first aid, rifle marksmanship and close order drill. Teamwork and self-discipline were emphasized throughout the training cycle.

He joined the Marine Corps in August, 1990.

HURON AND SANILAC AIDS Coordinator Janice Clark is working to educate the public, especially teenagers, about AIDS.

are especially important to Clark.

Since the length of time from exposure to the virus and death from AIDS can be as long as 20 years, Clark says that teens engaging in unprotected sex can be signing their own death warrants because of their lack of knowledge.

"We need to give our children the facts and help them sort through the issues. We also need to put our families back together again so that they'll start talking to each other," she says.

Parents should be the first source of information about AIDS prevention, but when parents don't talk to their kids, then the schools and the health department must step in and make sure teens have the correct information.

Under Clark's direction, the health departments sponsors two support groups, both called Positive Directions.

The first group is for those with AIDS, AIDS-related complex or who are HIV positive. Meetings are held regularly to give and receive support, exchange information, and promote a sense of healing.

"Knowing you have AIDS is such a heavy-duty thing, it would be extremely difficult for a person to deal with it by themselves," Clark says.

The second group, just starting, is one for parents, relatives, friends, and partners and other interested people, to help with their feelings, and to encourage them to be supportive of those with AIDS.

'In same boat' in Stockholm, Sweden!

By SALLY RUMMEL

Whenever you have shared thoughts and experiences with another person, have you ever used the expression "being in the same boat"?

For Wilbur R. Maust of Waterloo, Ont., a native of Pigeon, he "was in the same boat" with a fellow traveler to the World Symposium of Choral Music in Stockholm, Sweden last August.

On sabbatical from Conrad Grebel College at the University of Waterloo, Ont. where he is professor of music and chairman of the music department, Maust was one of 1000 choral conductors from around the world to attend the nine-day event, which also included four days in Tallin, Estonia and Helsinki, Finland.

On the first morning of the symposium as Maust was preparing to leave the ship called the "Gustaf Af Klint," a young man approached him on board and asked him if he knew how to get to the Symposium. As they started their 20-minute walk to the Conference Center, they began to introduce themselves.

His new acquaintance said he had just arrived by overnight ship from Finland where he was visiting friends, but that he came from Washington D.C., where he is a professor and chairman of the Music Department at Washington Bible College.

Returning some personal information, Maust told him he was also from the U.S. and in fact, from Michigan.

"Really?" said his acquaintance. "I also came from Michigan." He then inquired more specifically about where Maust was from and he told him, "I come from Huron County."

"That's interesting," his new friend said. "I'm from Huron County, too. What town are you from?"

"I told him I grew up on a farm near Bay Port and that my parents lived in Pigeon after they retired. It turned out that he, too, came from a farm on Caseville Road a few miles south of Pigeon and the two farms were not more than four miles apart!

His new friend turned out to be Dale Voelker, son of Don and Viola Voelker of Pigeon. Maust is the son of Richard and Elizabeth Maust and both "natives" have relatives in the Pigeon area.

Their introductions continued as Voelker shared that he went to Northwestern for his music doctorate, where he studied Church Music and Organ. Maust told him he went to Indiana University, where he took a music doctorate in Music History and Voice.

The two men, who shared such a powerful love of music, had never met in Michigan, but found themselves "in the same boat" in Stockholm, Sweden!

PIGEON NATIVES WILBUR MAUST, left and Dale Voelker, right, never met each other when they lived only four miles apart in Pigeon, but became acquainted for the first time when they both attended a choral symposium in Sweden.
