Lake water irrigation project planned

By AMY HEIDEN

Some Western Thumb farmers could be growing vegetable crops instead of grain crops in the future, if a proposal to build an irrigation project gains approval from the Michigan Department of Natural Resources. Twenty farmers, the state Agriculture Department, and Michigan State University have proposed a project to irrigate some 2,000 acres of tillable farmland in the proposed irrigation district, which would draw water from Saginaw Bay through Mud Creek and into a pipeline crossing under Filion Road and draining again into the Pigeon River.

But some critics have concerns about the project, such as whether or not naza musulm spread to inland waters from the lake, or whether Saginaw Bay pollutants will be introduced to inland waters, or whether the ditches that would supply water also act as drains for more fertilizer and insecticide runoff into the Great Lakes.

They also have expressed concern about the effects of lower lake levels on commercial and sport fishing, and on shoreline development.

"You have to be thinking about what's the cumulative effect if we allow a lot of these things," said David Dempsey of the environmental group Clean Water Action, in a recent statement to reporters.

If the pilot project is approved, almost 5,000 ft. of Mud Creek would be cleaned out and a pumping station would be built on Filion Road, a water transmission line would be installed under Cassville Road, the Newman Drain from Filion Road to Storm Road would be cleaned out and 3,000 ft. of the Filion Road ditch from Newman Drain East to the Pigeon River would be cleaned, participants say.

The Mud Creek Irrigation District, if approved and built, would be the first such district in Michigan.

No funds for Gagetown

Although the state issued a press release saying Gagetown Village is one of several Thumb communities to receive state funds, that’s no longer true.

The state had approved a $72,000 grant to help fund a water well project in Gagetown, but because the project was already underway, the village doesn’t qualify, said Village Clerk Elye Sonntag.

“Because we started construction of the well, the state won’t give us the grant,” said Sonntag. “Equally, the project...”

A treatise on hunting (part II)

By AMY HENRY

When George Sears came to Michigan in 1821, it was to change his profession, not his name. The 56-year-old dentist from Rochester, N.Y., who had relocated to the new frontier, Peru Williams and his family had settled in nearby Pewaugh Bay region, and it was this family that George Sears sought out and married. The couple had five children, including a daughter, and it was from this union that George Sears and his wife, Abigail, raised their family. Sears was a successful dentist, and he and his family lived in a log cabin near the village of Pulion, Ohio. He was greatly interested in the natural world, and he often took his family on long walks in the woods, teaching them about the plants and animals they encountered. Sears' love of nature and his knowledge of the natural world were passed down to his children, and it is said that he was a great influence on their love of the outdoors. Sears was also a skilled hunter, and he and his family enjoyed hunting deer, wild turkeys, and other game. Sears' hunting skills were legendary, and he was known for his ability to track game and to make a clean kill. Sears died in 1863, but his love of the outdoors and his knowledge of the natural world lived on in his family. The Sears family continued to hunt and to enjoy the outdoors, and their love of the natural world was passed down to future generations. Sears' legacy lives on today, as his family continues to enjoy the outdoors and to pass on his love of the natural world to future generations.

Sebewaing County Park work continuing

Wet weather has put construction of the new Huron County Park in Sebewaing slightly behind schedule, but construction is expected in time to provide basic services for the 1993 camping season.

Most of the sewer system has been laid, and the block walls for the bathhouse are going up steadily.

To meet grant specifications of the project, construction has to be completed by February, but officials plan to file for an extension and work on the project will continue through the winter as weather permits, they say.

When finished the park will have 50 sites with sewer and electrical services, a picnic area, walking trails, boat slips and fishing areas.
