

FOR PRESIDENT.
WINFIELD S. HANCOCK, OF PENN.
SILVANIA.

For Vice President, William H. English, of Indiana.

In the Ticket the Democracy Agrees to Nominate in Rotation.

A Full and Impartial Account of the Proceedings.

Prior to the meeting of the National Democratic Convention at Cleveland, the chief interest among the gathering delegates seemed to be centered on the question of Tilden's nomination. The worst enemy of the Tilden process, as we well know, was the Tammany organization of New York City, of which Hon. John Kelly is the president. Kelly, who is a member of the Democracy, but evidently aware in the interests of any one who defies the Tammany power, has been chosen as the delegate from New York. The publication, however, of Kelly's name as the Tammany delegate, has not been without its effect. It has caused the Tammany organization to be more than ever united in its support of Kelly, and it has also caused the Democracy to be more than ever united in its opposition to Kelly.

On the night of the 21st, the evening prior to the assembling of the convention, a meeting was held by the delegates at the various headquarters. The names of Judge Platt, King County, New York, were mentioned as the probable candidate of the New York delegation. This left in the field the following names:—William H. English, of Indiana; John Kelly, of New York; and William S. Hancock, of Pennsylvania. The names of these three gentlemen were mentioned in the various meetings, and it was generally understood that the delegates would be divided among them.

On the morning of the 22nd, the delegates assembled at the Convention Hall, in Cleveland, Ohio. The hall was filled with delegates from all over the country, and the atmosphere was one of great excitement. The delegates were divided into various groups, and they were engaged in conversation and in the exchange of views. The names of the candidates were mentioned again and again, and the delegates were seen to be very much interested in the proceedings.

The committee further reported that they had received a large number of resolutions and amendments. These resolutions were read and discussed, and it was found that they were generally in favor of the nomination of William S. Hancock for president and William H. English for vice-president. The delegates were then divided into sections, and they were engaged in the discussion of the various resolutions and amendments.

THE GRATEFUL GAMBLER.
The good, unfeeling gaze of a brave man, it is said, will see a tiger. The statement is perhaps an exaggerated one, but we will tell an incident of a man who saw a human tiger.
