BY DR. LA MOILLE

Water, true gift of heaven thou art; Without thy smile to bless, Earth were a desert and man's heart Could ne'er find happiness.

STARVING TO WIN A WIFE.

It was a July afternoon. Three sat on the veranda of the village hotel. Their feet were on the balcony railing, their chairs were tilted back and they were fanning themselves.

These men were Judge Barron, County

Judge, Parson Miller and Col. Gherkins, a retired militia officer, on no pay. Not one of them would see his 50th birthday, for they had passed it. "Speaking of fasting," said the Judge, breaking a long silence.

"Hasn't been mentioned," snarled the Colonel, interrupting.

The Judge dropped his chair squarely down on its four legs, and looked savagely at the Colonel. The Colonel returned the look and snapped his fingers

"Don't be boys!" unged the minister with a smile. He smaled because he knew the fiery but harneless ways of the gentlemen. "Well, we spe too old for this sort thing," said the Judge, leaning back of self-extermination." transmitted and the state of th will have it that way—reminds me of the Colonel, returning to the attack. my attempt at suicide."

"It was in the papers," said Gherkins, stopping his fanning long enough to glance sideways at the other. "It was," admitted the Judge, "but it doesn't signify now, over twenty-five ears afterward." "Humph!" grunted the Colonel.

"I was in love doctor," and the Judge turned his face toward the min-

"With a girl," continued Barron. "Well added !" cried Gherkins. Though the tendency of young men is, we know, to fall in love with old

"So you ought," said the Judge. But never mind that! I fell in love. That means to be misgrable. At 22 one has love as one has the measles; seversly all over as a matter of business."

"When I was a boy," suddenly began the Colonel.

"Why, that is ancient history," cried

The Colonel said something in an nudertone, and lighted a cigar. "I had always been in love with Miss Lon Dexter," continued the Judge. "I began to suffer when I was in roundabouts. was a sort of duplex, backection, extra-elastic passion. I suppose made a fool of myself. Didn't L Colonel ?"

"Decidedly!" declared that person. "I felt as sure of Lou as I did of myself," the Judge continued. "But when came back from college I thought everything had changed for the worse. There was no longer that familiarity and confidence that had existed between us. Half the time when I went to see her she was either busy or out for the evening, or engaged with a musty old fellow who had money, but whose name I wen't mention," "Musty, Judge?" howled the Colonel, springing to his feet. "Musty? Have

"Oh, well, consider the remark withdrawn," laughed the Judge. "The man was there, all the same, and kept me from confidential chate with the girl I loved." "And he knew it!" chuckled Gherkins.

"She knew it!" said the Judge, gravely. "I didn't mind any of these things so much as the story that she was going to marry the old fox, and that her wedding clothes were being made. That struck me like the ball from a Whitworth gun. 'Lou,' I said, the first time I met her after hearing this story, 'is it true that you're getting ready to marry this man?' naming face and looking up at you with a sauciness in her black eyes that would drive Notice and Lamber Yard man the L.S. a.W.S. a men crany. She looked at me that the contest, April 1, 1844.

"Ten minutes afterward I saw her walking with my venerable rival." "Venerable alongside of veal," said Gherkins, savagely.

The Judge laughed. "You are posted, Colonel," he said, You forget that I mentioned no name for the gentleman." "You might as well," said the other

"Oh, the doctor can wait or guess," was the reply. Then-"Miss Dexter's ndifference crazed me. I wanted to tell her that, as a man. I loved her. She knew that in my childhood I had idolized her. But what chance had I? What good would it do, if she were going to marry the infirm fellow wheezing asthmatically by her side? I went home as sured that life had no value to me. The more I thought of it the less I cared for it. The less I cared for it the greater my anxiety to be rid of it. To be rid of it meant to take it. Suicide is horribly vulgar, ordinarily. It is only the Frenchman who makes it sublime. He

"There! here! I must protest," exclaimed the parson, holding up his hands in horror. "Such talk is not orthodox." "I'm not telling an orthodox story, doctor. What I think now and thought then are two different affairs. Enough to say I resolved on killing myself. As in my disappointment. I felt no hunger, starvation seemed a very refined method "Economical to the last!" exclain

"You'll never carry the practice of your life to such an extreme," said Barron; "I have the satisfaction of knowing that. However, Colonel, your bitterness is natural. I forgive you, _Dr. Miller cannot fail to see that I'm treating you like a Christian-that is, as if you were one. Well, I began the siege myself. The supplies were cut off. I retired to my room and refused to eat. That meant a great deal when it is considered that for four years I had lived at a college boarding-house. It meant more when one remembers that it was done for love. Men talk of killing themselves for the objects of their affections, but they seldom, if ever, try the starystion plan. It takes true grit for that sort of thing. Perhaps this story of mine hasn't the sentimental fervor that animated me then. It seems now to have been an example of rather funny obstinacy. The first day was lived through without much discomfort; the second found me hungry; the third, I "Not by fifteen years," exclaimed the was half crazy for food, and the smell from the kitchen infuriated me. The doctor was summoned, and at last the newspaper of the town came out with a highly-seasoned story, ir which Miss Dexter was, by innuendoes, referred to as the cause of the trouble. Of this, however, I knew nothing. I was too busy in scheming to counter-act the plots of my friends to force food into my stomach to care what was being said outside of the house. The night of the third day was a horrible one. It was made up of a succession of dreams of banquets at which I could not eat enough to satisfy my hunger.

"The next morning I was out of my nead until noon." "Out of your stomach! Brains had nothing to do with it," said the Colonel. "Out of my head," repeated the Judge. "It seemed as though I was about to collapse and die. Everything was whirling around and around, when the door was opened and a face came into view. It had a familiar look, but at first I could not tell whose it was. I looked and looked and looked, and then dropped away in a fainting fit. It lasted for a minute. When I came to, the first thing that met my gaze was this same face. The eyes had the same electrical gleam as of old; the lips were just as seductive in their expression, and the voice made the sweetest of music. She Fred?" bringing that dear face of hers stoner to mine. "I shall continue to try.

A ring does not always denote a year, for the blue gum tree of Australia sheds its bark twice a year. A tree recently hewn, that was known to be only 18 cars old, showed thirty-six distinct ings of growth.

Old oaks and yews in England are not ancommon. Several oaks felled in Sherwood forest, about a quarter of a entury ago, exposed, on being sawn up, the date 1212 and the mark or cipher of King John; and it has been calculated that these trees must have been several centuries old at the time the marks were made.

Berks, Pa., claims the largest chestout tree in the country. It measures thirty-eight feet four inches in circumference; the lowest limbs are fifteen feet from the ground, and measure foureen feet in circumference at the base, The top of the tree is reached without langer by steps that are fastened between the limbs. It is estimated that that this tree contains about seventeen cords of wood. It still yields about three bushels of chestnuts annually

The oldest yew tree in England, which s situated in Cowhurst churchyard, was mentioned by Aubry, in the reign of Charles L, as then measuring ten-yards in circumference at a height of five feet from the ground. It is said, on the suthority of De Candolle, to be 1,456 rears old. Its present growth is about thirty-three feet. In 1820 this old tree was hollowed out, and a cannon ball was found in the center. In 1825 a severe storm deprived it of its upright branches. A door has been made to the inside of the tree, where seats are to be had for twelve persons comfortably.

BIOGRAPHY.

Thomas Babington Maranlay. This noted historian was the son of Zachery Macaulay, a West India merchant and wonderful philanthropist. His grandfather was Sir John Macaulay. a Presbyterian minister of West Scotland. Young Macaulay was born in the year 1800, educated at Trinity, Cambridge, where he acquired a reputation as a scholar and debater, and twice won the Chancellor's medal, first, by his peem "Pompeii," second, "Evening." He was elected Fellow of Trinity and devoted himself to literature, becoming a contributor to Knight's Quarterly Magazine In 1825 he made his appearance in the Edinburgh Review in his famous essay on Milton, a preduction so learned, enthusiastic, and brilliant that it captivated the whole reading world, and placed him in the first ranks of essayists. In 1826 he was called to the bar but never practiced the profession. About this time he was elected to Parliament, for which he repaid his constituents by setting forth their doctrine in a manner so luminous, powerful and attractive that his adversaries were charmed and convinced if they were not convicted.

In 1836 he went to India and spent some time in the preparation of a new penal code, but was not very successful. On his return he was re-sleeted to Parliament. As a statesman he was the implicit friend of freedom, both civil and religious. He eloquently sustained the Roman Catholic bill for the relief of Catholics, and in consequence was unre-elected without effort on his part. In 1848 he published the first two volumes of his world-renowned "History of England" the finest history, too, ever written by ancient or modern writer. It was received with an enthusiastic popularity which has been attained by very few of the great novelists.

When he published in 1850 his two last volumes they created such excitement in Paternoster row as had never been seen before. Shortly after he was elected a member of the French Academy of Moral and Political Science, and was raised to the peerage in England under the title of Baron Macaulay. He died in 1859, at Holly Lodge, near Loncumulated knowledge was prodigious. Allison said, "After a review of the chief characteristics of Lord Jeoffrey, McIntosh and Smith, we find Macanlay's turn of mind and style peculiar, and exhibit a combination rarely, if ever, exhibited in ancient or modern literature. Unlike Jeoffrey, he is deeply learned in lore ancient and modern. His mind is richly stored with the poetry and historn both of classical and continental literature. Unlike McIntosh, he is eminently dramatic and pictorial. He alternately speaks poetry to the soul and paints pictures to the eyes. Unlike Smith, he has omitted subjects of party contention and party interests, and grapples with great questions and immortal names, which will forever attract the interest and demand the attention of such men as Milton, Bacon and Machiavelli. The grand characteristic of his style is the shortness of his sentences. He often conveys several ideas in one line."
