Why They Moved.

Detroit has a genuine haunted house. Not one of the scared servant girl, buga-boo kind, but one that is haunted by an unwelcome presence and unearthly noises.

The writer has no doubt that nine-tenths of those who read this article will exclaim, "Pooh!" at the first line, and so would he, a few hours ago, to any haunted house story that was ever written. But he had an occasion yesterday to investi-gate a reputed case, and no one, had they accompanied him, would have had the slightest doubt remaining. To those who desire to investigate for themselves, he will give the address of entire reputable witnesses; not one only, but a dozen or

On S street there was erected four years ago a neat, pretty, six-room cot-tage, with a grass plat and shade trees in front, and a large, airy yard in the rear. Before the house was finished it became known that it was for rent, and there were plenty of would-be-tenants. A young matried couple, with a baby and nurse girl, were the accepted ones. They remained there precisely six days, going away one morning very early and unexaway one morning very early and allex-pectedly. There was some wonderment expressed, but another family moved in a day or two afterwards, and nothing more was thought of the occurrence in the neighborhood. The new tenants were a middle-aged widow and four grown-up children—two sturdy young mechanics and two misses of perhaps fifteen and seventeen years of age.

This family remained in the pretty cottage nearly two weeks and then quiet-ly departed. To a young lady-in the neighborhood, whose acquaintance she had formed during the fortnight, and nad formed during the formight, and into whose home she rite at tae last moment to say "good-bye," the youngest daughter said, in reply to an inquiry as to the cause of their leaving; "Mother says she would not live there if the owner would give her the house and lot," but offered no explanation of the words.

From that day to this the house has been vacant much of the time. Every few days a van of furniture has come un the street, and the articles been carried into that house. For a day or two women would be seen flitting from room to room, reappear, some morning, the furniture would be reloaded and driven off, and the owner would once more tack up the

No monarch, and very few private persons, can have led a life of higher, more intense and more absorbing interest than the young man who, in 1868, when but sixteen, found himself Mikado when but sixteen, found misses and of Japan, with the ancient but long dormant rights of sole and supreme ruler restored to that office. By fortunate chance the purple fell, in his case, on one well fixed to wear it, and the work done in Japan in which he has taken an active and intelligent share in fourteen years has been enormous. Between 1869 and 1871 the Daimios, the great feudal Princes, were, with the exception of the clan Satsuma—not radically subdued until 1877—whose chief was the mighty Salgo, denuded of their power, they and their military retainers receiving a page their military retainers receiving a pecu-niary compensation. In 1873 all classes of able-bodied men were rendered liable to conscription in the imperial army. This army, organized by Frenchmen, has now for nearly ten years been in a high state of efficiency. Its West Point, conducted chiefly on the pattern of that establishment, is Toyama, near Tokio. The total military force is 120,000. The Japanese navy is on the model of the British. It includes twenty war vessels, nineteen being steamships. National education on the new model dates from 1871. By 1873 the Government schools handlers—oftentimes old men. The Japanese post-office is another of the Nation's triumphs. A mole-hill has in ten years grown into a mountain. The railroads, though not numerous, are cheap and pay well. They are now chiefly superintended and worked by natives. Accidents are almost unknown. From half a mile in September, 1869, the telegraph lines have grown to 4,000 miles; worked by 1.800 employes, of whom ten only are foreigners. It would be well for this country if its jails were in half as satisfactory plight as are those in the pears of Tarkey believe Nation's triumphs. A mole-hill has in in half as satisfactory plight as are those of Japan, and in this matter Japan has borrowed but little from the foreigner.

The most minute precautions are taken to prevent abuse of authority by prison officials. The Governor of a jail may inflict no punishment more severe than the dark cell or shackles, and this but for a strictly limited period, without the sauction of a District Court. This system is carried out with as much strictness in the most remote provinces as in the capital. The vast system thus in little more than ten years created is directed and controlled by a Cabinet of thirteen, over which the Mikado vigi-lantly presides, assisted by a council of the ablest and best informed men, who give advice and attend to the details of enactments made by the Cabinet. Provincial assemblies have existed since 1878, and National Parliamentary Government is to the order of the day.

wenty years ago came from London, which was then, as it is now, the market of the world for Eastern fabrics markes of the world for hastern fathres. The prices were high and the colors were regattractive to people accustomed to the softgeous landscapes and enormous bounded of brilliant flowers which then formed the groundwork of all carpets. Fradually the rugs made their way into Fradually the rugs made their way into-sone rich houses, and with the introduc-tion of stained and polished floors too handsome to cover up with causels, rugs became common, and vessels coming from Smyrna, and other Mediterranean ports with fig/ and dates began to bring a few rugs and carpets. About fifteen years ago Americans began to give or-ders directly to the Turkish merchants who act and agents for the purchase who act and agents for the purchase of such stuffs, and now the business is a large one, half a million dollars' worth

Rugs vary in price not so much because of the size as on account of the quality of the wool and the fineness of the work. Now and then a rug is found in which the colors are of unusual beauty, and in such cases it acquires an exceptional value on that account. Dealers and connoisseurs in rugs designate had 400,000 pupils. To-day they have over over 2,500,000. Tokio University has nearly 2,000. One well acquainted with Japanese pupils says that intellectually they are on the average equal to those of Europe or America, while in the gentler virtues of research doubling or a Feraghan, or Kula, or Ushak, or village in which carpet-making is the gentler virtues of respect docility, industry, politeness, and self-control, they are unquestionably superior. A prevailing feature among this could be color always produced in the color always produced by a color always produced by they are unquestionably superior. A prevailing feature among this people, and one which strikes even the least observant, is their almost exasperatingly sweet temper. It is well-nigh impossite ble to make them angry, and a lady, long resident in Japan; says it is really true that Japanese children are scarcely ever heard to cry. This colostial condition the nursery is not produced by the soothing syrups of a Japanese Pinkslow, but is the result of the tact of the child-handlers—oftentimes old men.
