THE STORY TELLER

BEHIND THE BARS.
The moon shone in the garden. The bees hummed in the flowers. The wind rustled the leaves. Through all the golden hours. From forest and field and grove. From hill and dale and stream. From every spot where life is found. The birds sang and the flowers bloomed. So what is it all to me?

RAND KENNEDY'S WOOING.

To save a fine example of contrast one should walk through the upper end of Duke Street, during the busy hours. Upon the left, the houses of the rich and well-to-do, with their trim, well-kept lawns, and their comfortable interiors. Upon the right, the tenements of the poor, with their grimy walls and their narrow, dark passages.

Just as this time, while depressed by his recent bereavement and this looked-for confidence upon by a committee from the City of Boston, he decided to extend Duke Street through to the river. This was a bold and daring proposition, for the street was then but a narrow alley, and the houses upon either side were built so close together that it was impossible to get a horse-drawn carriage or a team of oxen between them.

He little dreamed of the suffering concealed beneath his calm demeanor. His home, and the home of his ancestors, had been built upon the site of the old city of London. His father, an emigrant from the old world, had brought with him the traditions and customs of his native land. He had learned to value his home as a sacred place, and he had endeavored to preserve it as such.

He had not known that his father had been a miser, and that his mother had been a spendthrift. He had not known that his father had been a miser, and that his mother had been a spendthrift. He had not known that his father had been a miser, and that his mother had been a spendthrift.

"I had not known that my father had been a miser, and that my mother had been a spendthrift. He had not known that his father had been a miser, and that his mother had been a spendthrift. He had not known that his father had been a miser, and that his mother had been a spendthrift."

"He had not known that his father had been a miser, and that his mother had been a spendthrift. He had not known that his father had been a miser, and that his mother had been a spendthrift. He had not known that his father had been a miser, and that his mother had been a spendthrift."

"He had not known that his father had been a miser, and that his mother had been a spendthrift. He had not known that his father had been a miser, and that his mother had been a spendthrift. He had not known that his father had been a miser, and that his mother had been a spendthrift."

"He had not known that his father had been a miser, and that his mother had been a spendthrift. He had not known that his father had been a miser, and that his mother had been a spendthrift. He had not known that his father had been a miser, and that his mother had been a spendthrift."

"He had not known that his father had been a miser, and that his mother had been a spendthrift. He had not known that his father had been a miser, and that his mother had been a spendthrift. He had not known that his father had been a miser, and that his mother had been a spendthrift."

in such a mood he reached the house and went to the study. He found the key in the lock, and he opened the door. He stepped into the study, and he found the key in the lock, and he opened the door. He stepped into the study, and he found the key in the lock, and he opened the door.

"He had not known that his father had been a miser, and that his mother had been a spendthrift. He had not known that his father had been a miser, and that his mother had been a spendthrift. He had not known that his father had been a miser, and that his mother had been a spendthrift."

It is a very common thing, as Carlyle has said, to see a man's life, most properly speaking, in his various trials and tribulations, and in the way in which he meets them. It is not the man himself, but the way in which he meets his trials, that makes his life a success or a failure. It is not the man himself, but the way in which he meets his trials, that makes his life a success or a failure.

Most people want to be successful. Instead of taking hold of the first opportunity that comes their way, they wait until it is too late. They wait until the opportunity has passed them by, and then they are left with nothing. They are left with nothing, and they are left with nothing.

The world is full of people who do things "fairly well." It is in daily and pressing need of those who do them supremely well. There are thousands who would like to write, who make no grammatical blunders, are full of no ideas, and can strike off sentences that read fairly well. They are full of no ideas, and can strike off sentences that read fairly well.

Red or green silk pompon trimmings are fashionably worn on walking costumes of tweed or nuns' gray ladies' cloth. The new zephyr plaids make fancy law-tennis costumes, and the colors of oatmeal combined are olive, the new shade of cranberry-red, and pale primrose yellow.

Long Jersey gloves, made of leather in silk and linen, or finest cashmere, are highly favored for spring wear. These gloves can be found in every desirable street store.

Balbriggan stockings abound in the new varied tints of strawberry, amber, terra-cotta, drake-smoke, blue, laurel green, orange, edelweiss, and a deep rich shade of violet. Each of these colors is clothed with old gold or cream white.
