The Treasure of Freeman'sBy ROBERT DAVID STEVENSCHAPTER IIIAs he and his companions stood at the mouth of the cave, MacGregor turned to the man who had ventured nearest the entrance. "What is the nature of your proposition?" he asked."I have been sent by a party of gentlemen who have been hunting for buried treasure in this part of the country," replied the man. "They have found it, and wish to purchase it from the native owner."

Chapter VI

"And what is the nature of the treasure?" asked MacGregor."It is a hoard of gold and jewels," said the man. "We have evidence that it was buried here many years ago, and that it has remained intact ever since."

Chapter VII

"We will make you a fair offer," said MacGregor. "But we must see the treasure before we can agree to purchase it."

Chapter VIII

"We will bring a large party of men to view it," said the man. "We will be able to convince you of the truth of our statements."

Chapter IX

"We will discuss the matter further," said MacGregor. "But for the present, I must return to the village and inform the villagers of our intentions."

Chapter X

"We will send word to you as soon as we have made our decision," said the man. "We hope to see you soon."
