TO AN ENGLISH SPARROW.

Is it possible that I should have seen you in the narrow Promenade of my bleak window sill? When the blue came in my spirits to hark you, you came in sight like an arrow. Singing cheer up, cheer up! So loud on your tiny, battle quill.

Like you, my love, my sunny friend, You've a way that has captured my heart; And though others your feelings may try to find, I'm a friend that will ever take your part. And as much as you wish you may sit on My sill which you often have lit on Singing cheer up, cheer up! With a fervor much sweeter than art.

Few people, I know, prize your singing, And that your hair, and your powers; But I count you with the robin's voice ringing Every June in the lush, morning hours; I confess that I look upward winging, And the robin's silver throat ringing, "Chirp! chirp! chirp!"

And when winds of heaven for ever blowing, And the window pane rattles with its rattle, When the heavens are all in a commotion, When the world is all in a commotion, When we need their best, they were going, But you still, your heart overflowing, In that "cheer up, cheer up!"

Your own mossy nest, your own nest, I'll sing it in the light of day; You have taught me, my sunny friend, When Fortune's smile is all in a day's van, I will sing it in the light of day; Singing cheer up, cheer up! I will fight and will sing it in the light of day; Singing cheer up, cheer up!

WILLIAMSON WAS SURPRISED. Not because he killed two bears, but because of a bear's question. "I have had a good many cubs in my den," said the bear, "and I am glad to see you. I have had a good many cubs in my den, and I am glad to see you."

"I had a revolver in my pocket. I pulled it out and began peppering away at the bear as he slouched slowly toward the point it had started for. Out of the six shots the pistol held I put five of them in the big mark, because every time one struck him he gave a start and a sharp squeal or moan. All the effect the bullets seemed to have on him, though, was to hurry up his pace. He reached the bank and climbed out."

"If I had had any more cartridges with me I would have been fool enough to follow the bear and get myself in trouble. I was too much worked up, as it was, to let the impudent old pig stealer get away if I could help, and I dropped my red right there and hurried up to the lumber camp and got a rifle and plenty of ammunition. It was my belief that the bear was heading for a swamp a mile or so up the creek, and I made a short cut for the same place. I reached the edge of the swamp, and, seeing no sign of the bear, concluded that I had got there ahead of him. I was preparing to take a position and wait for him when I heard a grunt in the direction of an old log road off to the right, and there, with nothing but his head to be seen above the surface of a deep mud hole, was the bear. He raised his head a little higher, and my aim was so good that I found I had put myself to the necessity of tugging the bear out of the mud hole or leave him in it, for he sank in the mud as dead as a stone."

"I walked up to make a survey of the big beast and his muddy grave. I stood trying to plan a way to raise him without going for help, when I heard a movement in the brush at the roadside, and looking up saw the head of another big bear, which was peering out at me with a very evil expression on his face. He was on top of a bank, ten feet above the road. The bear did not move, but stood there staring at me fiercely. I didn't like the look, and sent a bullet between the bear's eyes. He came tumbling down the bank like a log down a railway, and lay in the road apparently as dead as the bear in the mudhole; but while I stood looking at him he got up and started for me on his hind feet. My rifle was empty. I backed away, putting in a cartridge as I retreated. But I didn't have to use it. The bear only took three or four steps, but he made the woods howl while he was taking them. Then he fell backward, flat on his back, and that was the end of him."

"Having two bears I was forced to go for help to get them into camp. When we got them there and dressed them I had the shock of surprise I spoke of. The first one I killed, the one in the mudhole, which I supposed was the bear I had seen in the creek and put the five pistol balls in, had only one bullet in him, and that was in his brain. The one that I shot on the bank, and regarded merely as an interloper, was really the bear I was after. It had a rifle ball hole between its eyes and five pistol balls distributed about in its right side; the one which was toward me in the creek. Of course I was sorry for the other bear, because I had no grudge against him whatever. But it was too late to help the matter then."

NEW YORK SUN. The French dramatist, started out as a surgeon's assistant and became a professor of mathematics before he took to play writing.

OUR HEAVENLY FATHER.

LESSON XII, SECOND QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, JUNE 22.

Text of the Lesson, Luke xii, 22-34—Commentary by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

(Compiled from Lesson Helper Quarterly by permission of H. S. Hoffman, publisher, Philadelphia.)

And He said unto His disciples, Therefore I say unto you, He is anxious for your life, what ye shall eat; nor yet for your body, what ye shall put on? (R. V.) The previous verse, which is the last verse of the last lesson, contrasts treasure in this world for one's self, and treasure with God, which is enduring. Men who live only for this world will naturally seek treasure here; but disciples of Christ who are no longer of this world should seek to have their treasure where they belong. His disciples may have things, as He told of the man having larger loaves in which to strew his corn, well, we shall not be troubled that way; but the question with us is, now that we have left all to follow Him, what about the necessities of life, our food and clothing? He said, "If ye have faith, ye shall say, 'Give us this day our daily bread,' and it shall be given you." "Take no thought, therefore, for the morrow, for the morrow shall be anxious for itself; but let us have our food and our clothing, and we shall be able to take care of ourselves." "Take no thought, therefore, for the morrow, for the morrow shall be anxious for itself; but let us have our food and our clothing, and we shall be able to take care of ourselves."

THE LIFE IS MORE THAN MEAT AND DRINK. "The life is more than meat and drink, but that which endureth unto life." When He, after fast and prayer, was tempted by the devil, He said, "Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God." (Matt. iv, 4.) And again when weary, hungry, and thirsty, He said to His disciples, "I have meat to eat that ye know not of." "Consider the ravens: they do not sow, neither do they reap, neither do they have a storehouse, neither do they have a barn; yet they are fed: how much more shall the Father feed you?" (Matt. x, 1-4.)
