THE DUCHESS.

CHAPTER XXI.

The Duchess, having arrived at the house of Sir Henry, found the situation much more serious than she had expected. The house was surrounded by a crowd of people, and the atmosphere was thick with the odour of smoke. She knew that the situation was critical, and she was determined to take action.

THE BIDUP COTTON

From Down South, it is reported, 700,000 bales of cotton have passed from the hands of the farmer to the hands of the cotton factor within the past week, and this is but a beginning. Cotton has made a splendid rally in comparison with the great competitive prices of a few months ago, and the short crop is beginning to tell. The supplies at Memphis and New Orleans are very limited, and large sphyhons are in demand.

PURCHASE DEBENTURES OF THE

ST. LOUIS COTTON

From Delta there is an understanding that the new crop is going to the market at about $5 50 cents a bale, and that the market has already been secured for the entire crop. The cotton is going to the market at a rapid rate, and the market is similar to the one in St. Louis. The supplies at the former market are very limited, and large sphyhons are in demand.

On Christmas Morning.

The Christmas spirit would be hard to ignore, whether you choose to embrace it wholeheartedly or not. After all, there's a certain charm to the holiday season, despite the stress and commercialization that can often accompany it.

One Home at Christmas.

Eve wasbusily observing the Christmas spirit in her own home. It was all about the decorations, the gifts, the traditions, and the sense of togetherness. The house was filled with the scent of pine and peppermint, and the sound of Christmas carols filled the air.

Christmas Gifts.

Christmas gift buying was in full swing. People were busy shopping for their loved ones, trying to find the perfect present. The stores were crowded, and the lines at checkout were long. It was a busy time of year, but people seemed to thrive on the hustle and bustle.

Happy, Happy Christmas.

Eve was happy and content. The holiday season was always a special time for her, and this year was no exception. She savored every moment, from the decorations to the gifts to the quality time spent with family.

Christmas Eve.

Eve was excited for Christmas Eve. She spent the day preparing for the big day, baking cookies, wrapping gifts, and assembling the tree. The house was abuzz with the excitement of the holiday spirit.

Christmas Day.

Christmas Day was filled with joy and laughter. Eve spent the day with her family, exchanging gifts and sharing stories. It was a special day, and she cherished every moment of it.

In conclusion, Christmas is a special time of year, a time for giving, devotion, and joy. It's a time to come together with loved ones and share in the spirit of the season. Whether you celebrate it or not, there's no denying the power of Christmas.
