By Mr. D. Brown
THURSDAY, JUNE 1, 1901

A day report for reform should include the new fish commissioner to see to it that the fish better be better. Sitting three hours on a muddy bank without a nibble in six fish institutions.

This estimate was for $3,000,000 within the last twenty years. P. B. Brown expended upward of $3,000,000 in newspaper advertisements, and notwithstanding this expenditure, he left behind a fortune of $5,000,000. Many other business men seek to make their fortunes without such expenditure. It is needless to add that they do not succeed.

There is ground for the criticism of the public schools that they often employ as instructors incompetent, dull-witted men and women who ought never to have been certified to teach, and that they often make too ambitious attempts in the line of the higher instruction and give too little attention to the thoroughness in the common branches.

The rule of law which makes imperative that a fair trial and the benefit of a reasonable doubt be given to all persons charged with offenses punishable by the law does not appear to apply to those unfortunate who are convicted of crimes by a grand jury of acquaintances (sometimes friends, often enemies) on the charge of insanity.

It would appear that while it has been pretty thoroughly demonstrated that the Koch discovery is a specific remedy for consumption, it will undoubtedly prove a valuable medicine in its qualities and effects upon the human system are thoroughly understood. This discovery is the fruit of long and patient experimenting.

We have been encouraging a conservative, dangerous and alien class of immigrants. We have been using the most unscrupulous means to get rid of them, and we are doing so, when we should have been using the efforts to sift out the chaff and worthless stub from the good grain. We have not only neglected the good, but we have also neglected the bad, and we have not only neglected the good, but we have also neglected the bad.

There are men who are born with a genius for making money. By instinct, as it were, they see the ready application of means to ends. They glance the workings of the law of supply and demand, are quick to discern the signs of the times and to see the slightest change in the market. The instincts of these men are as sensitive to the economic world as are those of the poet in the realm of the beautiful.

There is a race of savages who believe that the strength of a wild animal passes into the man who fights with and kills it. They believe that the kind is veritably true of the difficulties which men contend with and finally conquer. The force which they have broken down by vigorous antagonism passes into them and becomes a part of them, enabling them to face new opponents with still greater power.

America has the reputation of being the country most eager to make money, most ready to spend it—judiciously or otherwise. America is young yet and has the spirit of a child in that it is that of prodigality. Rich in luxuries and rich in industry, it remains to be seen whether she will have the wisdom to command and control her resources or whether she will become the victim of her own unparalleled advantages.

It is to be regretted that so little thought is given to the wise spending of money as compared to the zealous attention given to earning it. Parents take unwearied pains to send their children for lucrative positions and having educated them in that direction do all that is possible to secure valuable openings for them, as if this were the ultimate. Little thought is given to the question of what the child's life should be. Little thought is given to the culture of individual tastes and aspirations. The child is made to be successful in that which he is to do, but the child for making money is not succeeding in that, all else would follow.

Selfishness, not money, is the root of all evil. All the great schemes for the improvement of mankind fail from ignoring the natural selfishness of all mankind. The theories of the statesmen and the arguments of the philosophers are convincing until you take into consideration the humanity of man, and his humanity is selfishness. Both selfishness and humanity are the keys to the solution of the world's problems.

The Michigan Central will build a belt line around Detroit. The new and beautiful chapel just erected by the Michigan Central is a fine example of the art of building. A grand jury has been called to find out who is the author of the "Michigan Central" in the case of the Michigan Central.

The residents of Ewen, near Ontonagon, have fought for three days. No building was burned.

The Haverstock women have organized an auxiliary G. A. R. relief corps, with Mrs. E. S. Haverstock as president.

DECORATION DAY.
Everything was favorable this year for the proper celebration or observation of decoration day. The weather was perfect and people from village and county seemed to be out in force, honoring the memory of the boys in blue who had gone before. Most of the merchants decorated their store fronts and exchange place looked like a garden. The streets were lined with flags and bunting. The children displayed considerable skill in marching, the flag and gun drills. There was also a large crowd of people at the cemetery to witness the exercises.
