OUR MISSIONS BURN

AND OUR MISSIONARIES FLEE FOR THEIR LIVES.

Indelible Panic, Bloodthirsty Turks Fire the American Missions at Kharpout—Thousands of Christians Murdered—No Relief in Sight.

The later reports from the scenes of the massacres in Armenia only make the terrible affairs seem more bloody. There were fully 800 victims at Harput (or Kharpout) and eight of the 12 buildings belonging to the American missionaries there were sacked and burned in spite of the assurances of the porte to U. S. Ambassador Terrell that the lives and property of Americans would be protected and although it was announced that Turkish gendarmes had been detailed to guard the missions. The American missionaries, however, escaped, and are now in a place of safety. Mr. Terrell has notified the porte that the United States will hold it responsible for the lives of the missionaries. The inhabitants around Kharpout are in great distress. From Guram, in the vilayet of Sivas, where the Kurds have been besieging 4,000 Armenians, it is reported that all the Armenians have been massacred. In the district of Mardin, where there is a large Armenian population, a number of villages have been burned to the ground, the people are destitute and suffering. This outbreak is regarded there as being very significant and as indicating that a systematic campaign against all Christians, and not against the Armenian Christians in particular, as has generally been believed to be the case.

Boston: News of the massacre at and the devastation of the American mission at Kharpout was received at the room of the American board of foreign missions, and caused the greatest consternation, as the Kharpout mission was one of the most prosperous and successful, and was also considered most secure from trouble. Kharpout is 200 miles southwest of Erzerum and about 20 miles east of the English-Turkish frontier. The town has a large Turkish population, but the plain villages are almost entirely Armenian. Fifteen out-stations lie within 10 miles from the city. The limits of the Kharpout station embrace a district nearly one-third as large as New England. The first church was founded in Kharpout in 1856, with two members. Now there are 25 churches which have received to membership more than 3,000 persons. The value of the property destroyed is between $75,000 and $100,000. There were five men and seven women missionaries from America at Kharpout.

Boston: The following cable message was received by the American board of foreign missions from Rev. H. O. Dwight, of Constantinople, by way of Philadelphia:

Five hundred were killed in Kharpout, eight of the mission buildings burned. The people are fleeing. The American missionaries are being killed. The American missionaries are being killed. The American missionaries are being killed.

Rome: A dispatch received here from Alexandria, northern Syria, says that a massacre of Christians has occurred in the vicinity of that town and in the presence of 300 Turkish soldiers who did not render any assistance. The agitation and slaughter is being extended and a bloody massacre is now reported from Aleppo. It is added that the European residents of Alexandria are in danger. Alexandria is people by about 2,500 persons, principally Greek Christians and lies on the gulf of the same name on the extreme northern end of the Syrian coast.

The Ambassadors Do Nothing. Constantinople: No definite action is known to have been taken by the ambassadors of the powers, but it is reported that they will join in a note to the porte, to the effect that as the sultan's authority is not sufficient to quell the disturbances, the powers will occupy jointly various portions of the Turkish empire until order is fully restored and a better system of government inaugurated. In order to carry out the policy of the powers, the most powerful fleet ever gathered together is being assembled at Salonica bay.

England Wants Reform Delayed. London: The Post has published an article, evidently inspired by the foreign office, which is understood to indicate that the government has been in consultation with Sir Philip Currie, British ambassador to Turkey, has decided that the utmost effort must be made to maintain the integrity of the Turkish empire and, therefore, efforts must in the first place, be directed to restoring order in the empire, and only after that object has been attained should the sultan be laid aside. He has already given evidence of a desire to introduce reforms. It cannot be doubted that he will defer to the wishes of the powers as soon as circumstances permit him to do so.

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 21, 1895.

St. Nicholas in 1896. For almost a quarter of a century—forty-two years—to be exact—St. Nicholas Magazine has been bringing to the young people of the land, it began existing in 1873, consolidating with the children's magazine of that day, "The Little Folks," and "The Children's Hour," "The School Days Magazine," and "The Young Folks" among them. The last children's magazine to be merged in St. Nicholas was "Wide Awake," which was purchased and consolidated with St. Nicholas in 1894. It has been fortunate in securing writers and contributors of the highest caliber, and has given to its readers many works that have become imperishable classics in juvenile literature. St. Nicholas has had for many years a large circulation in Europe, and it is said to be read by many royal children. When the children of the Prince of Wales were young the Prince took six copies of the magazine to him, and the present Crown Prince of Italy grew up a constant reader of St. Nicholas.

The magazine is a help to those that have the care and upbringing of children, in that it is full of bright suggestions and hints to cultivate high aspirations without being "preachy" and "prosy" and tugging in too apparent moralizing. Teachers are always loyal to it, and they will be glad to learn what has been added for their leading feature will be a delightful series of letters written by young people from St. Nicholas to the children of the world, describing the pictures and the illustrations of the magazine, and the children of the world, describing the pictures and the illustrations of the magazine, and the children of the world, describing the pictures and the illustrations of the magazine.

THE HISTORIC ROUTE.

The Nashville, Chattanooga & St. Louis Railway, the model railroad of the South in equipment, roadway and service, is also the greatest in historical interest, more than fifty famous battlefields and five national cemeteries being located on the various lines of this system. This is the preferred route to Atlanta for the Cotton States and International Exposition, open from September 18, to December 31, 1895, for which very low excursion rates have been made. Through sleeping car service from St. Louis to Atlanta via Evansville, Nashville and Chattanooga. This is the route of the famous "Dixie Flyer," through sleeping car line which runs the year round between Nashville and Jacksonville, Fla. For further information, address Branch F. Hill, 328 Madison Building, Chicago, Ill., or R. C. Cowardin, Western Passenger Agent, Railway Exchange Building, St. Louis, Missouri, or D. J. Mullaney, Pass. Agt., 50 West Fourth St., Cincinnati, O., or W. D. Dyer, G. P. & T. A., Nashville, Tenn.

We understand the Methodist church is now ready for occupancy and will be used again on Sunday morning when Rev. L. P. Davis of Detroit will preach. Rev. Dan. Shier of Marquette City, Mich., is in the morning to raise money to pay off the debt.

Meridian chapter A. R. M., conferred the royal arch degree upon W. J. Waters, Fred M. Freeman and A. J. Waters, Tuesday evening. Among the visitors present was the Orator of Tecumseh, who placed a magnificent bouquet of chrysanthemums from St. Nicholas green houses at the high priest, in the front of the altar. It was greatly admired.

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 21, 1895.

St. Nicholas in 1896. For almost a quarter of a century—forty-two years—to be exact—St. Nicholas Magazine has been bringing to the young people of the land, it began existing in 1873, consolidating with the children's magazine of that day, "The Little Folks," and "The Children's Hour," "The School Days Magazine," and "The Young Folks" among them. The last children's magazine to be merged in St. Nicholas was "Wide Awake," which was purchased and consolidated with St. Nicholas in 1894. It has been fortunate in securing writers and contributors of the highest caliber, and has given to its readers many works that have become imperishable classics in juvenile literature. St. Nicholas has had for many years a large circulation in Europe, and it is said to be read by many royal children. When the children of the Prince of Wales were young the Prince took six copies of the magazine to him, and the present Crown Prince of Italy grew up a constant reader of St. Nicholas.

The magazine is a help to those that have the care and upbringing of children, in that it is full of bright suggestions and hints to cultivate high aspirations without being "preachy" and "prosy" and tugging in too apparent moralizing. Teachers are always loyal to it, and they will be glad to learn what has been added for their leading feature will be a delightful series of letters written by young people from St. Nicholas to the children of the world, describing the pictures and the illustrations of the magazine, and the children of the world, describing the pictures and the illustrations of the magazine.

Gastric Dyspepsia

And constipation troubled me for over a year. I grew worse and could hardly perform my household duties. I had severe pains in my stomach, especially at night. I treated with my physician six months without avail. I resorted to Hood's Sarsaparilla and having taken six bottles I am free from all distress in my stomach and am no longer troubled with dyspepsia. Mrs. MARGARET FENNER, Indian Falls, N. Y.

Hood's Sarsaparilla Is the Only True Blood Purifier

Prominently in the public eye. $1.50 for $5 Hood's Pills easy to buy, easy to take, easy in effect. 50c.

JOHN BILLINGS - PHILOSOPHY.

I am more interested in the vices of mankind than I am in their virtues. Their vices need charity; their virtues will take care of themselves. I know of men whose word is better than their bond. These fellows I call the knight-errants in honesty. There is nothing the human race accepts more greedily than flattery, and nothing it ought to be more ashamed of. No man has ever yet begun so wise as to know how much he loves himself, and how little he loves his neighbor.

AN ACCIDENT.

Mr. Quintus Hummel, of 118 Michigan Ave., Detroit, tells a War Story of his own Experience, and the Result.

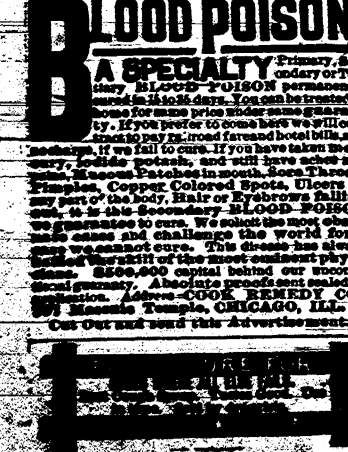

Our representative called at 118 Michigan Avenue, the residence of Mr. Quintus Hummel. Mr. Hummel is a veteran of the late war, and received, in the campaign, an injury which has given him much pain and suffering since. He belonged to a Michigan cavalry regiment and his horse becoming frightened one day reared up, throwing him backward. In falling he struck his spine on a sharp stone, inflicting a deep cut over five inches long. The injury affected the kidneys. About two years ago the left kidney started to bleed, and has been doing so ever since. Mr. Hummel, in a few pointed sentences, gave our representative the following account: "The accident of my 'war days' left me in bad shape: pain in my back and spine rendered me almost useless, and I was compelled to give up work entirely. I could not turn over in bed without assistance. I have spent hundreds of dollars in various ways trying to find relief. Physicians have told me my spine was honeycombed for 13 inches. I had given up in despair, never hoping for relief, when a friend told me about Doan's Kidney Pills, and they have done me a world of good. The pain has disappeared from my back, and the bleeding of my kidney has almost entirely stopped. I know I can never be entirely cured, as I would have to be a new man, but Doan's Kidney Pills have done more to make me feel like a new man than all the other things I have tried during past years. I have not had any recurrence of the pain or bleeding since taking them."

THE LOST PARADISE.

HE room had been very still for a long while; only the even, monotonous splash of the outgoing tide, and now and again a restless, unconscious movement of the dying woman in the bed, disturbed the awe-some stillness of the night.

In the big arm chair by the bed side, in the light of the lamp, sat a gaunt woman, angular and haggard, with thin, compressed lips, yellow skin, light eyes, and dead-straw colored hair drawn tightly back from her forehead and twisted in an uncompromising knot at the nape of her neck. She had watched for many weary nights now beside the bed, but still her eyes were wide and watchful, and her attitude alert. She counted each fluttering breath of the girlish form beneath the sheet, she noted each quiver of the unconscious eyelids.

The night wore on, and, with the coming of the gray dawn, a wind arose, moaning round the little house, and shaking the fastenings of the sick room window.

The dying woman stirred; she moaned, then slowly opened her eyes. Great sad, blue eyes—like a child's in trouble. She fixed them upon the watcher in the chair with a pathetic look of entreaty.

"Hepzibah!" The pale lips just formed the whispered word. The gaunt woman rose hastily and bent over her.

"Hepzibah—you have been very good to me."

A painful pause, breathing was so difficult.

"Am I dying, now?"

The woman bending over her made no response, but tears gathered in her hard eyes, her thin lips quivered.

"No, you need not tell me. I know I am. I can feel it. Hepzibah—you have been so good to me. There is something that you must do for me when I am gone."

Hepzibah bent over her, waiting, watching.

The dying girl raised one feeble hand, pointing toward the old bureau in the corner of the room.

"There—in the third drawer on the left—a packet—letters—will you bring them to me?"

Hepzibah brought over to her a little bundle, tied round with faded pink ribbon.

The dying woman fingered it lovingly, wistfully.

"They are Jack's letters—my Jack. Hepzibah! For when I am gone, I trust you to burn them for me. Tom must never know. Poor Tom—he has been a good husband to me; but I loved Jack first—only he was so wild—I did not know that he cared for me. And he went away in a temper—and I married Tom. But when Jack came back from sea, last time, I—I found out how much he cared. It was terrible—and I loved him so! Then he was drowned—my poor Jack—"

A weak sob choked her broken whispering.

"Promise you will burn them, Hepzibah, for Tom's sake—"

"Dear, I promise."

"You have been so good to me, so lovingly."

"You'll promise to burn them."

newly made grave in the cliff side, and nothing seemed real to him but that. Hepzibah watched him from under her white eyelashes and kept silent, but his pipe was all ready for him when he came indoors, and his favorite food simmered on the hob.

Hepzibah's hair grew brighter as the days went on; her cheeks had a comely flush; she began to take thought of her dress. She bought a blue gingham gown in the village, and a muslin handkerchief for her neck. Her voice took a softer note, she began to sing about her work.

But Tom would sit in the churchyard through the long summer twilights, and when he came into supper his feet dragged wearily, and his eyes were dull with misery.

"You should not grieve so," said Hepzibah softly, one night after supper. She was knitting in the firelight; her head was bent over her work.

Tom woke up from a dream; he looked at her with seeing eyes.

"Ah, it's well to say that to a man whose heart is breaking!"

His voice grew husky; he turned his head away to the fire.

"But you shouldn't grieve as one without hope. Time must soften things a bit—you have your life before you."

Tom laughed a short, bitter laugh, not good to hear.

"She was all I had—my Nellie. The apple of my eye. What god's life to me now? Such pretty ways she had, too," he went on, musingly; "such tender, loving ways—"

Hepzibah's needle flashed in the firelight.

"There are other women in the world as fond as Nellie," she said softly, with her eyes on her knitting.

There was a long silence in the room. The fire flickered; a cinder fell on the hearth. Hepzibah could hear her heart throbs; she slowly lifted her eyes to the man's face.

He was not looking at her at all, but at a china shepherdess upon a little table against the wall. His eyes were troubled; he was trying to remember.

"My Nellie did not keep that on there. No, it was on the mantelpiece, here, that she had it."

He brought the ornament over, dusting it with his handkerchief.

"We must keep the things as she left them, Hepzibah," he said. "But Hepzibah had slipped out of the door into the summer darkness."

She rested her arms on the little gate, and stood looking far out to sea. Her face shone white and ghostly in the dimness. She shivered in the warm air.

"You dead woman—you Nellie," she whispered tensely, "why will you not give him up to me? You have your Jack, you do not want him—and I—oh, my God!"

A great fearless sob choked her; the shimmering waves mocked her; her face hardened.

"Why should I not tell him? I shall do you no harm. Are you anywhere here to care at all? God, the life beyond—are these anything but words? How can one hurt the dead? You are asleep in the churchyard, there, and I love him—and I tell you I love him!"

The man was sitting smoking moodily, gazing into the glowing fire, when Hepzibah glided in, and stood behind his chair.

"Tom, I can't bear that you should grieve so. She wasn't worthy of a love like yours."

"Hepzibah!"

"The letters!"

Hepzibah laid the packet on the table and crept up the staircase to her room. She fell on her knees by the bedside, clutching the covert light over her mouth, that her deep-voiced prayer might be stifled. She shook as with the ague. The gates of heaven and hell were open.

The still hours passed by. Night waned, but Hepzibah, wild-eyed and numb, crouched by her bed, straining her ears for any sound from the room below. Anything, anything, but this deadly silence. The hours seemed eternities.

It grew unbearable. Disheveled, wan, fearful, she crept down the stairs and peeped in.

CURRENT NOTES FROM FIELDS OF INDUSTRY.

A New Lamp Globe—Pneumatic Water Boats—A Pretty Experiment Which Illustrates the Use of Different Kinds of Lenses.

HERE is another very pretty experiment which, like all that we have printed, may easily be made without special apparatus. This one illustrates the use of different kinds of lenses.

Take a glass goblet in which the lower part is shaped out at the sides, and holding it by the stem, incline it towards you, after having poured a little water into it, so that the water will collect in a large drop in that part of the goblet that is not shaped out. Now, if you will hold the glass as shown in the illustration and look at the tablecloth through the drop of water, you will find that you may easily count the threads, for the drop takes the form of a double convex lens, as shown in the small figure A, and that, you know, is what is called a magnifying glass or single microscope. This same drop of water will enable you to examine in detail the different parts of a plant or of an insect, parts that you would hardly be able to see with the unaided eye.

Now, look through the part of the goblet that is shaped out. That you will find, is concave on the inside and convex also on the outside; it is, therefore, a double convex lens, as shown in the small figure B. The threads of the tablecloth, looked at through this water lens, are so much diminished in size that you can hardly see them, which demonstrates that a double convex lens makes an object appear smaller than it really is.

Pneumatic Water Boats.

It is hard to tell whether these inventions should be called boats, buoys or rafts. They are of recent introduction and seem destined to bear an important part in many lines of economics. The cut is reproduced from the Pacific Rural Press, which printed two other pictures of the same kind of boat. They were photographs of actual occurrences, and not fancy sketches. One of them represented a party of four persons having left a steamer beyond Hell Gate, New York, and making their way to shore. One of the company was a woman. The second shows a fishing party, consisting of nine persons in five boats, a grown person and a child being in each of four boats. The picture shown on this page represents a party of hunters unpacking and launching the 'pneumatic boat.'

It is described by its manufacturer as a pneumatic boat, made of rubber cloth, and shaped like a horse collar. From the forward part of the bottom depend two boots, or leg cases, the ends of which are provided with collapsing paddles, which open on the back stroke and close on the forward stroke, like a duck's foot. The small end of the oval is the bow, and a stiff rudder strapped in one position to the stern keeps the boat in line. It takes from three to five minutes to get it ready. The boatman puts his feet into the cases, and, holding up the boat by the loops, he walks down to the water and launches himself. It is claimed there is no danger of capsizing, as the center of gravity is always below the water line. The user of this strange craft may paddle himself in any direction at the rate of two or three miles an hour. Ladies and children may use it with safety in calm water. The boat seems to possess practical value. The arms and body of the occupant are free for the use of gun or rod, and in moving about there is no noise or splash. In rough weather and water a rubber storm cape can be used, which is fastened under the break-water by a cord. Speed is not a factor, but two or three miles an hour can be attained. The adult boat measures forty-four inches long by thirty-four inches in breadth, and will draw from two to five inches according to weights imposed; when collapsed it weighs about fifteen pounds, and can be folded and packed in a valise. In packing it can be used to get to or from large boats in deep water without a tender, and as a life preserver can quickly be made ready for use.—Farmers' Review.

Marvels Done with a Whip.

A decided sensation has been created in Vienna by a man who probably stands alone in the world in his particular line of performance. This gentleman's name is Plankner, and he is an Austro-Hungarian by birth. He is an expert—or rather a phenomenal artist—in the use of the gad-whip. Being something totally new in the way of entertainments his appearance has created a decided sensation, and packed houses are the order of the day. Mr. Plankner is a thick-set, muscular little man, with very keen eyes and swarthy complexion. His wrists, from constant use of the whip, are marvellous in strength. There are no trillier muscles about his arms. He has no use for a chair—his seat, but comes on the stage in a well-worn pair of

and, after making an uncouth bow to the audience, goes right to work. The first thing he does is to take a long-lashed, stout-handled whip in each hand, and with orchestra accompaniment proceed to crack or snap them at a terrific rate. The sound made by the whips in this manner is graduated from a noise like a rifle report to the soft click of a billiard-ball. It makes a curious sort of music, and serves to show how he can regulate the force of each stroke. More interest is evinced, however, when he seizes a vicious-looking gad-whip with an abnormally long lash. It is provided with a very heavy handle of medium length, ending in a crook. This is his favorite, and what he can do with it is really wonderful. He first gives an idea of what fearful force there lies in a whiplash in the hands of an expert. A large frame, over which is stretched a calf or sheep skin, is brought on the stage. This is marked with large polka-dots of red

PRINCESS VICTORIA.

The Heroine of a Romance Who Lately Passed Away.

The heroine of a romance in real life has just died. This was Princess Victoria of Capua, daughter of the brother of the king of Naples. A very handsome woman of the Amazonian type, she lived alone for many years in her chateau near Lucca, her one hobby and object in life being the breaking in of wild horses. The peasants of the neighborhood used to call her Diana. She would drive a four-in-hand of half-broken animals through the most rugged mountain passes with a resolution which astonished all who met her. Equally strange is the story of her birth. Her mother was a beautiful Irish girl who, having attracted the love of the heir presumptive of the throne of Naples, accepted his hand, but refused to live at court because his family denied her the privileges of her new rank. So the pair retired into obscurity and lived on the revenues of the prince's estate. She had only two children—the princess whose death is just announced and a son who became insane owing to hatred of women. So fixed was his delusion and so fierce did he become if a woman came near him or was visible from the castle windows that the walls had to be built up to an extraordinary height, thereby shutting out all view of the outside world.

O Yes, We're Queer Sometimes. Strange things occasionally happen where they are not looked for. A stray horse was arrested in Chicago Monday booked as a vagrant, given a jury trial and a fine of $15 was imposed. The horse, not having $15 in his inside pocket, was sent to the city pound.

$100 Reward, $100. The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and curing the patient, without building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers, that they offer One Dollar for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of Testimonials. Address, F. J. CENNEY & CO., Toledo, O.
