This total of forty hits applied to the projectiles fired gives about three through her, one probably fired by the given over to the fames of their burst. the projectiles fired gives about three per cent of successful shots. To the layman this may seem a small ratio, but it is very good indeed when the smoke, distance and the difficulties of a running fight are considered. The engagement started at a range of six thousand yards—that is, at a distance of about three miles. Following out an approved sea maxim and the especial instructions formulated by Rear Admiral Sampson, the ships closed the successful shots. To the per cent of successful shots. To the the battleships. Each claims the shot. An 8-inch shell, credited to the Brook-lyn, entered the side just forward of the port beam, burst and disabled four crews manning the guns of that deck. This is the shot, Admiral Cervera says, which set fire to the ship, and, as her fire mains were cut, forced her, from an inability to extinguish the flames, to surrender and seek the shore.
