A Hint as to Table Lines. The preferred table lines is of fine damask with an embroidered cipher This device is no longer made very greater for the tablecloth than for the to Judge as table linen; no fabric where dulterations or exact qualities are so difficult to discern. In other than high-grade establishments, where one must depend upon personal indement for the purity of a fabric, there are few points to keep in mind. Pure linen is hard and slippery, never soft and pliable. If a moistened finger be applied to an all-linen cloth the moistur will at once appear on the other side, whereas in mixed goods it will appea slowly or not at all. The flax odor is always noticeable in linens, and every woman should learn to recognize it or its absence. Sheets with fuffled for are again used, after being long abandoned. Sheets and pillowcases, with bolster cases, if a bolster is employed, are made in sets to match. Yellow or grayish lace, now seen on neighbor's, whose reputation of dress-underwear, is likewise adopted for bed ing "just as it happens" at home, in linen.
