The real reason behind the projected ship canal through Nicaragua or the isthmus of Panama, which is now engrossing so much attention, is the fact that goods may be transported more easily on the water than over the land. Examples in every-day life emphasizthe difference. Two mules draw one hundred tons of coal in a canal boat; on land they would have difficulty in ingging three or four tons in a coal

This consideration greatly affects the burg toal and Lake Superior ores are near together, because they can b transported so great a part of the dis-tance by water. It also largely accounts for America's prominence as a great stee!-producing country. Stove coal is usually cheap in places to which it can go by water, and high where it must go by rail.
