Michael O'Halleran, Lieutenant Sergeant of the Summerdale Station Police Department, writes from 1903 W. Monroe street, Chicago, Ill.:

"Several of the members of our station have good reason to praise Peruna. Several times when they were drenched, a severe cold has followed which, it seemed impossible to throw off until one of them tried Peruna, and found the first bottle relieved me. A few bottles more cold that a man would want.

"Since then we have used it for colds, catarrh, influenza and other complaints arising in the wake of inclement weather, and we all feel well pleased with Peruna."

MICHAEL O'HALLERAN.

PIETRO'S DAUGHTER.

By JOHN NELSON.

Copyright, 1903, by Daily Story Publishing Company.

Pietro was a familiar figure in the Planet editorial rooms, and the men, the old ones, that is, had begun to look upon him as something of a nuisance. The new men, those just out of college and brooking in on little assignments, thought him an interesting character and often forgot the city editor's injunction "not to encourage the Dago." Pietro was useful in his way, though, for he sometimes brought in bits of news from the Italian quarter that it could be worked up into Sunday stories, and when the triple murder took place on Seven street two years ago it was Pietro who put Johnson, the police man, on to the hiding place of the murderer. He was a big boat fisherman and Johnson got his salary raised and a new uniform in the shape of a blue coat at the same time. Of course, Johnson made it all right with Pietro and kept mum as to the source of his information.

But Pietro was beginning to be a bother in the city room, coming in at all hours of the day and night with some piece of information about the interest of a new baby or the finding of a whole dress in the rag barrel; things in which the Planet readers were not at all interested. In the summer Pietro ground a hurdy-gurdy and in winter kept a chestnut stand just around the corner from the Planet paper offices, and no reporter known to the Italian ever failed to stop and help himself when he passed the stand. Pietro's hurdy-gurdy was an inharmonious machine that had long since passed its prime, but it served its end every day in pleasant weather and the children in the courts danced to its tinny notes.

Some days Pietro was accompanied by his daughter. She played the tambourine and collected the pennies when a business like air. She wasn't pretty, except in her eyes and hair. They were jet black and sparkled when she moved or spoke. She seemed about 15 years old, but like all Italian children, dressed as though she were 25. She was childish in her manners, however, and not altogether unattractive. When she began coming into the Planet office with her father, even the city editor forgot to be gruff for there was something instinctively gentle in the girl's manner of speaking. Her mother was dead, Pietro had told him, and the girl was his only companion. He seemed to think a great deal of her, and always smiled contentedly on the men complimented her. The reporters began to watch for her coming and sometimes a quarter or even more of a penny would be heard to Pietro's hurdy-gurdy, at least one of us would take the time to dance with the children and give the couple a coin. No one ever knew what the girl did in winter while her father attended to the chestnut stand, and in fact, no one ever had occasion to ask.

One day toward the end of summer Pietro came in, smiling. He had some news, he said. Angelica, his daughter, had a sweetheart, a young Italian, who owned a horse and wagon and did a thriving business in the fruit line. Pietro was enthusiastic about his future son-in-law.

"He good man," he said. "Make plenty de money. Gota de hoss and wagon, an say he take me in de biz' with heem. Make plenty de mon', gotta de house. Angelica she like heem mucha. They git marry. Sis!"

Of course, the staff individually and collectively congratulated him on his prospects and Hill, the youngest man on the staff, who had picked up some of the Italian he had at different times heard in the police court, was delegated to tell Pietro what the boys thought of his son-in-law. Hill came back with the information that Pietro was a big boat fisherman, and that Angelica was a beautiful girl, and that the wedding was to take place in the Italian church until just before the wedding day. At each of the visits Hill, who never had much of importance to do, made himself agreeable to the girl, and she smiled sweetly upon him. Carolio sometimes accompanied the party, and usually he had nothing to say except to answer questions. He seemed to dislike Hill, but was always courteous, as is every Italian who, if he cuts your throat will do it politely. We chaffed Hill occasionally about the girl, and told him to watch out that the lover didn't stick a stiletto into him some day.

"It's good practice to talk to the girl," he would say, "and as for Carolio, a cigar will make him all right. I know the class."

Summer finally passed into autumn and the day came for the banns to be published. Hill, with his knowledge of

"De man dead, too," said Pietro, "de class," and spent fifty cents on a fancy ornament for the girl and had also supplied himself with some big cigars for Glacomo. Hill knew when he came in for their usual call, he presented the gifts with a speech in his villainous Italian. Angelica received hers with a pleasant smile, and "Grazia, signor," and Giacomo took his cigars in silence. Hill smiled and said afterward he'd bet he'd be called upon to attend the first christening in the new family.

On toward 11 o'clock that night, when half the force was at work on the regular evening copy, and the "copy" readers were swearing over some bad work, Pietro came up to the city room door on the run. His familiar, rather quick step, had given place to a tired sort of tramp, and he looked unusually old and broken. He was the full light of the room. He walked straight over to the desk of the city editor and stood with his hat in his hands. The city editor looked up.

"Well, what is it?" he asked.

"Mein killa de girl," said the Italian, in his own Rob' street. Sticka de knife in her."

"All right," said the city editor, "I'll send Johnson down when he comes in," and added a profanity directed to himself for he turned to his work again.

"De man dead, too," said Pietro after a moment's silence.

Then he turned and walked slowly down the stairs and out into the street.

Hill got the police news and finished it. It came from Heads to end in short order.

Hill, a bachelor, lives in a modest room in a modest apartment house in a modest locality. He is a modest young man in every particular except his ambition, which is immodest.

Hill's room is on the second floor, and when he reached the front door on his way home that night he found Pietro sitting on the steps. He was crying softly to himself, and Hill, with his usual kindness of heart, called him to the top of the steps and gave him a cigar. Pietro sat there for an hour, and Hill, who had nothing else to do, sat with him. Pietro told his story in a few words. Angelica had been found dead in her bed, stabbed to the heart. Carolio had disappeared. Pietro had no idea where he was. Hill, who had seen the girl's body, knew that Carolio had left the city, and that he would never be seen again.

Pietro left Hill at the door of his room and went down the street. Hill went to bed and to sleep.

Pietro was a familiar figure in the Planet editorial rooms.

Hill felt himself called upon to do the honors of the office, and as he was only a "cub," the honors fell to him alone. He talked to Angelica in the language he thought to be Italian, and she must have understood part of what he said, for she blushed occasionally. Giacomo understood, too, for he growled once or twice at some rather profound remark of Hill's.

The trio made the visit short that day, but Angelica and Pietro came in often, now to report the progress of the courting. The marriage was not to take place until the music season was over, and, naturally, the banns would not be published in the Italian church until then.

Term Easter is of German Origin.

Our term Easter is of German origin, but the name by which the festival is designated from the beginning is the Paschal, a name derived from the Hebrew: It commemorates the deliverance of the Jews from Egyptian bondage when the destroying angel spared the first-born of the Hebrews because their doors were marked by the blood of the Paschal lamb.

The Easter festival is the greatest in the Christian calendar; it is the climax of the events in the life of our divine Lord—his birth, his labors, his miracles, his betrayal, the bitterness of his agony at Gethsemane, and his cruel death on Calvary all culminated in the victory we commemorate on this glorious day.

The church has always held that the miraculous deliverance of the Hebrew people from Egyptian bondage was the type and figure of the far greater deliverance which would follow when Christ, our Pasch, as St. Paul says, would be sacrificed and by his blood would save us from eternal death.

The Christian Pasch was instituted on that night when our Savior, Jesus Christ, surrounded by his disciples at the Last Supper which he held with them, gave them under the form of bread and wine his body and his blood to drink. There is nothing in all the gospels set forth in language more unequivocal than this fact. The church has always taught, as he himself declared, that our divine Lord is truly and really present, under the forms of bread and wine, consecrated by the words uttered by himself, and spoken by those authorized by him to use them.

It is true that he suffered and died that all men might be saved, yet we know, from his own words and the teachings of his apostles, that many may not be saved because they will not make the necessary effort and sacrifice—"Many are called but few chosen." Faith alone in the redeeming sacrifice will not bring salvation; there must be on our part to make ourselves worthy thereof. It is not enough to have faith; we must also labor: "I have fought the good fight, I have kept the faith," St. Paul says; he did not consider it enough to have the faith only—it must be accompanied by good work.

The church, therefore, celebrates this day with more of joy and gladness and ceremony than any other in commemoration of the institution of that Christian Pasch which means so much to humanity! for millions of her children, under her guidance and direction, through prayer and repentance, and other penitential works are made worthy to participate in this divine banquet. They are restored to the friendship of God and have earned for themselves eternal life, for our Savior has said: "If any man eat of this bread he will live forever, and the bread that I will give is my flesh for the life of the world." (John vi.)

And she celebrates this day with unusual joy and gladness for the further reason: That it is the anniversary of that day on which the Founder by his own inherent power raised himself from the dead, thus giving the strongest possible proof of his divinity, and leaving to us, who believe in him and love him, a reason for the faith that is in us.

The Book of God.

Highest of all is the book of God. This book is the master key of noblest spirits, in hours when they were filled with a passionate hunger for righteousness, and by that book a record for these great spiritual experiences in their poems, psalms and letters. No other book has such treasures of wisdom and culture. It reaches us on the path that leads to prosperity and peace. It is the great book, the book of hope and life, because it is the book of God.—Rev. N. D. Hillis, Congregationalist, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Heathen Nations Celebrate the Day

In the Christian churches of all nations Easter is celebrated as the day on which the Great Teacher, the Jesus Christ, rose from the dead and thereby consummated his divine plan of redeeming the human race. Since Easter is so indissolubly associated with the life of the Founder of the Christian religion, one would naturally assume that it is a purely Occidental festival, having its origin in the west and being confined in observance to Caucasian countries. Yet, strangely enough, in several of the countries of the Orient, in India, in Japan, in China, we find religious festivals bearing a wonderful resemblance—festivals that were observed by pious people thousands of years before the beginning of the Christian era laid the foundations of western civilization and power.

The festival of India analogous to the Christian Easter is called the "Feast of Buddha"; in Japan it is named the "Feast of the Higan," while in China they term the great spring-time celebration "The Ancestral Worship." All these holidays have deep religious significance, for all have their origin in the spirit of thankfulness and rejoicing that wherever man lives he has ever greeted the death of winter and the dawn of spring. In this sense Easter, the Higan, the Ancestral Worship, are all more than mere church days—they are man's spontaneous outpouring of gratitude

The Chorister.

Ye choirs of new Jerusalem,
Your sweetest notes employ,
The Paschal victory to hymn
In strains of holy joy.

to nature, alike beneficent mother of both Occident and Orient.

A deep religious sentiment governs the Christian observance of Easter, and in that particular the Chinese ancestral worship is similar to it. The fifth commandment of the Christian Decalogue is their first. "Thou shalt honor thy father and mother," and in sin in the eyes of the pious Chinese is so heinous as that of disobedience or disrespect to parents.

This filial piety is the fundamental virtue of their social life, and the reverence for the dead, in which this father does not end with life, but is still shown to his memory long after his death. Nor is the deference merely an individual custom. Time has hallowed it into a great national festival.

It is called Tsing-Ming, and occurs in the spring of the year. The Chinese do not make much ado about the coming of a child of humanity, person, but when a father or a mother dies, especially if they have grown old, honored and beyond the allotted span of life, then the great ceremony attends the birth, from which proceeds one of their great common proverbs, "As much trouble as a funeral."

There is nothing in the lore of eastern religions to conflict with the hope of a life hereafter. Almost every faith of the Orient has for its foundation the theory of a risen Redeemer. And yet who can make answer to these momentous questions?

Easter Festival of Great Age.

The festival of Easter is much older than the Resurrection of Jesus. Christianity not only converted the magnificent pagan temples, which it could not pull down, into churches, but it also adopted and adapted as many of the rites and ceremonies of heathen antiquity as were too deeply rooted in the habits and affections of the people to be eradicated. From the Greeks and the Romans the early Christians borrowed their emblems of resurrection and immortality—the Peacock and the Phoenix. The Easter egg, too, as a religious symbol is as old as the pyramids of Egypt and the primer of Oriental philosophy, which taught that the world was hatched from an egg about the time of the vernal equinox. We read also that the Romans in early spring ran races in an oval—an egg-shaped arena, when the winner was presented with eggs accompanied with wishes that his noble family may increase and multiply. Christianity colored the egg red in memory of the blood shed for their redemption.

That ceremonial Christianity is in a large measure paganism transformed or rejuvenated is admitted by the best scholars in the church as well as out of it—by Geseleus, Von Wieseler and Baronius, as well as by Max-Muller and Renan. "The church has borrowed many customs from the religion of the Romans and other pagans," says an ecclesiastical authority, "but it has sanctified them." Another writes that "the pagan festivals laden with superstition were changed into the praiseworthy festivals of the martyrs." Still another defends the practice by saying: "It was permitted the church to transfer to pious uses those ceremonies which the pagans had wickedly applied in a superstitious worship."

Ostera or Eostre, derived from "Ost," meaning East, was a Saxon Goddess who presided over the luminous powers which revived the earth and resurrected life out of the shadow of darkness and the mold of the grave. She was the divinity whose face shone like the glory of the sunrise and the brightness of the dawn; her embroidered breath made bill and dale fragrant, and her smile shed beauty over every breaking bud and blossom. The people congregated in the fields to cheer her arrival in the skies, because she came to destroy the spell of winter-darkness, sterility, storm, and death, and to shake from her golden urn blessings upon man and beast alike. "The Sun is risen!" they shouted, as they greeted one another and frisked and danced on the new grass. Our Teutonic ancestors devoted eight days of April, which they called the Ostermonat, in the worship of their beautiful goddess of life and love perennial, whose arrows, tipped with flame, had shot fresh hope into their hearts. When Christianity converted them it left them in circumstances as favorable to the spread of the new faith as the Roman Empire had been to the spread of the Christian religion.

OF NOVEL DESIGN.

Perhaps the most curious Easter egg ever made was one ordered by a South African millionaire for his bride. It was made in London, and was nine feet long and eighteen feet in circumference at the widest part. The shell of this wonderful egg was made of chocolate, most elaborately adorned. It was intended as a wedding present, and had the whole of an ostrich for a trousseau for the girl he was to marry. It also had in it an enormous quantity of expensive jewelry.

It is said that the most costly Easter egg ever made in the country was ordered by a railway magnate for his little son. It was a miniature carriage, most exquisitely appointed, in the shape of an egg. The exterior was of the finest white enamel, and the interior of white, quilted satin. This dainty little vehicle was drawn by two tiny ponies in gold harness. A boy would be hard indeed to please if such a beautiful present did not fill his heart with gladness. But the boys of the present day are luxurious.

GIFTS OF THE CZAR.

Probably the most valuable Easter eggs in the world are those given by the Czars of Russia to their wives. Last Easter an egg was given to the Czarina which was, perhaps, the most beautiful and costly ever made. The egg incloses a magnificent jeweled heart set in rare, many-colored gems and surrounded by twenty-five tiny miniatures, portraits of the members of the Russian royal family. An egg which she received on another occasion contained a miniature ship. It was made of pure gold and accurate in every detail, down to the smallest cable. This was mounted on a barylite of the purest water. It would be hard to conceive anything lovelier. The amount of work this represented can be imagined when it is learned that it took a famous goldsmith ten months to make it.

MOTTOES FOR THE DAY.

The latest mottoes for Easter are as distinctive and appropriate to the season as any of the gift articles. There are little papier mache boxes, made in the shape of chickens, for the newly hatched kind. The heads of these lift off, and inside is found the tiny egg-motto.

It is becoming more and more the custom every year for people who are fond of—and of course to send Easter gifts, and so the shops vie with each other in producing novelties appropriate for the season. Of course, this gets do the largest business of the year, as flowers are emblematic of the holiday. But many persons would rather give some remembrance which will last beyond the day.

SOME WORKS OF ART.

A most charming idea for a person who desires to give an Easter gift is to buy a papier mache, or preferably, a satin box in the shape of an egg. In this a present of some kind would be placed—a piece of jewelry or trinket of some kind, a pair of gloves, a pretty handkerchief, a lace collar, a bottle of perfume, or anything else that may occur to the giver. Most boxes of this kind are made in boxes of silver. The latter, filled with bonbons, are sure to please anybody.

The latest Easter novelty is a candy egg. The inside of the shell is filled with candy, over a nest of green moss, and when a young girl breaks in her breast is touched, behold! an egg drops into her nest as naturally as if she was indeed alive. This is the most ingenious and attractive contrivance yet produced for the Easter season. The chicken is a little box whose head lifts off. In it are placed eggs about the size of those of a pigeon, made of any sweet material the buyer desires. She has the great advantage over a real hen that she will lay as many eggs and in as quick succession as may be desired.

EASTER IN PARIS.

Twenty-five millions of kisses will be kissed in Paris during the twenty-four hours following upon Easter morning—25,000,000 on the basis of "the kiss you take is paid by that you give." But whether the joy be always mutual, and everybody considers himself and herself in everybody else's debt on that account, can't be said.

As to the 25,000,000, the mode of computation is easy enough: On an average each Parisian gives and receives ten Easter kisses, and while, doubtless, some cranks refuse to steal "immortal blessings from red lips" for hygienic or other reasons, others, and plenty of them, exchange as many as a hundred or more. As a matter of fact, there are certain theatrical and musical critics who get kissed as often as 250 times about Easter, and by perfectly pretty women, too.

This avalanche starts rolling down the mountainside of hallowed custom and fashion at 12 midnight, the happy moment when the world, the flesh, and the devil—particularly the flesh—resume their rights of way, after the long and tedious fast.

THE EASTER EGG.

The Easter egg has always been one of the most popular features of the Easterntide. It owes its origin, as many of the popular Easter observances do, to pagan tradition. It was held as symbolic of renewed life, and in the Christian church is an old emblem of the resurrection. In Germany, instead of the Easter egg, is presented an emblematic print, in which three hens are holding a basket, wherein are three eggs; whereas in Vienna the Easter egg is composed or silver, mother of pearl, or bronze, and filled with knickknacks of some kind.

Formerly in England the Easter egg was solemnly blessed by the priest, and being elaborately colored, was often kept as an amulet. Easter eggs, or pace or pask eggs as they used to be called, have from time immemorial been prepared much as they are today, being boiled hard in water colored with red, blue, or violet dyes, with inscriptions, devices, or landscapes traced upon them. Some of the designs are very beautiful.

LET US POST YOU.

The time will come, sooner or later, when you will want to know where is the place to buy lumber and building material. Cecil Rhodes who is said to have been responsible for the Boer war, died yesterday.

And now the threshers of Washtenaw county demand better roads and if the farmers don't make 'em they may guess what they still get.

An electric line is now projected from Adrian to Devils lake, Addison, Cement City and Clarks' lake to Jackson, with a spur from Devils' lake to Hudson.

Dr. Hanna of Jackson is to succeed H. E. Edwards as postmaster at Jackson. Edward's request to be allowed to remain in office until December, was denied by Congressman Smith.

It matters say that there is not much wheat in the hands of the farmers in this vicinity. There is some wheat that has been held from year to year until it is in very poor condition and is not of much value.

Sheriff Shepard of Adrian passed through here Monday with J. B. Partridge, upon the Milan merchant's bond, to be placed in the Jackson prison to serve a three years sentence for shooting Jesse Hooker of Adrian.

The Michigan Telephone Co. has just elected a new director for Ann Arbor, Ypsilanti, Manchester, Chelsea, Milan, Belleville, Dexter, Saline, and Hamburg. It contains all the corrections and new numbers up to March 1st and all former directories should be destroyed.

T. B. Bailey has been reappointed postmaster. He has made a very good officer and with Miss Marion Farrell as assistant and T. J. Farrell, T. J. Thorne and H. F. Boshton as rural mail carriers and Enoch Silkworth as depot mail carrier, the fact that the patrons of this office are as well served as any. The receipts of the office has also greatly increased.

Saline people are working up a local telephone system. Their Observer says: It is the wish that each one desirous of becoming a patron, shall purchase the phone and own it and pay a small sum each year to keep up the expense of an exchange. Contracts have been drawn up, printed and as soon as they are ready to secure a meeting will be called to organize.

The Manchester Canning and Packing Co. has filed articles of incorporation with the county clerk. The capital is stated at $10,000 divided into 1,000 shares of $10 each, 87 per cent of which is paid in. There are 65 shareholders, all but three of whom hold from 10 to 20 shares. Three hold 50 shares and two 20 each. It will be seen that no one overshadows the small stockholders.

We believe that a majority of the American people are in favor of a right exclusion of Chinese. They are a class of people who seldom become Americanized and their miserable habits are a menace to all people with whom they come in contact. The house committee of congress are in favor of prohibitory measures in the United States and all insular possessions, including Hawaii and the Philippines.

We are sorry to learn that complaint has been made that some boys have disturbed the meetings in the chapel car. Rev Kamm layed for the boys the other night when in the act of pounding on the under side of the car with sticks. He caught one of them and thus obtained the names of all. It is quite unusual for our village boys to do such things for it is true that there will be no more complaints of their disturbing meetings or people, if there is they may expect more vigorous proceedings than a mere lecture.

The April St. Nicholas brings to an end the long serial by John Bennett, entitled "The story of Barbara," and starts a long short story" presents "The boys of the Rincon ranch," being the adventures of city boys in Texas, a careful study of outdoor life on a ranch, and an official bits of unusual natural history. The illustrator, B. M. Justice, has given an especially good picture of a bucking bronco. Besides the long story there are short stories by Alice Balch Abbot and Ruador Jenks, with articles by Prof. J. H. Gore, Rossiind Richards and Frederic Dunn. Mr. Dean's being an account of the famous boy choristers in the united states. The departments are full of prize awards; a feature that appeals strongly to the young St. Nicholas readers.

The Grand Rapids Times records the first snake story of the season. Wm. Green had a desperate battle with snakes near Baker's corners. "A short distance from the corners he ran into a bunch of seven snakes. He picked up a small rail, made a stab at the nearest reptile and cut it in two parts. Five more followed in quick succession and the seventh escaped. The snakes were of a common species and averaged two and one half feet in length. Luckily Mr. Green was uninjured in the incident."

FOR YOUNG FOLKS.

Are there any boys or girls in your home? If so, do you want them to grow up familiar with the best literature published? If so, why not begin quickest? There is a way to do it, at an expense of less than one cent a day—a way to have in your home the greatest educational force of our time.

The testimony for Young Folks "is its medium —magazine absolutely unequalled in the literature of the world, and in the matter of illustration, assisted by a large corps of competent specialists and editors, it is illustrated by the greatest of American illustrators.

some new features are to be introduced into this famous periodical—one is the printing of long stories complete in a single number—no serials. A splendid group of stories by the best living writers for young folks has been gathered for this purpose.

"Nature Study"

is not a great feature of St. Nicholas. The young readers ask questions and they are answered in the department called "Nature and Science." Private schools like the material for this alone. The "St Nicholas League" is an organization of St. Nicholas readers whereby prizes are offered for the best pictures, stories, poems, etc.

Nurses' Experience.

Medical men say that a good nurse in a difficult case is better than medicine, but when we can get a good nurse and good medicine, the patient stands a much better chance of recovery. The few words of advice given below by nurse Eliza King, are well worthy the attention of all readers:

"I have constantly used St. Jacobs Oil in the various cases I have occupied as nurse, and have invariably found it excellent in all cases requiring outward application, such as sprains, bruises, rheumatic affections, neuralgia, etc. In cases of pleurisy it is an excellent remedy—well rubbed in, I can strongly recommend it after several years' use and experience. It should be in every household."

Sister Carolina, St. Andrew's Hospital, writes: "I have found St. Jacobs Oil a most efficacious remedy in gout; also in sprains and bruises. Indeed, we cannot say too much in its praise, and our doctor is ordering it constantly."

TALMAGE'S SERMON.

MISFORTUNES AND TRIALS OF CHRISTIANS ARE HEAVEN-SENT.

Must Not to Test the Strength and Fortitude of Those Afflicted—Dread Corn Is Bruised Because He Will Not Ever Be Thrashing It.

Washington, March 23.—From a corpus familiar to the farmer Dr. Talmage draws lessons of consolation and encouragement for people in sorrow and adversity. The text is Isaiah xxviii, 27, 28: "Dill is not threshed with a thrashing instrument, neither is a cart wheel turned about upon the cummin, but the fitches are beaten out with a staff and the cummin with a rod. Bread corn is bruised because he will not ever be thrashing it."

Misfortunes of various kinds come upon various people, and in all times the great need of ninety-nine people out of a hundred is solace. Look, then, to this neglected allegory of my text.

There are three kinds of seed mentioned—fitche, cummin and corn. Of the last we all know. But it may be well to state that the fitches and the cummin were small seeds, like the caraway or the chickpea. When these grains or herbs were to be thrashed they were thrown on the floor, and the workmen would come along with their staff or rod or flail and beat them until the seed would be separated, but when the corn was to be thrashed that was thrown on the floor, and the men would fasten horses or oxen to a sled with iron instruments underneath, that would be drawn around the thrashing floor, and so the work would be accomplished. Isaiah uses these figures of speech for different products. "The fitches are not thrashed with a thrashing instrument, neither is a cart wheel turned about the cummin, but the fitches are beaten out with a staff and the cummin with a rod. Bread corn is bruised because he will not ever be thrashing it."

The great thought that the text presses upon our souls is that we all go through some kind of thrashing process. The fact that you may be devoting your life to honorable and noble purposes will not win you any escape. All who live godly in Christ Jesus must suffer persecution. Besides that, there are the seasicknesses and the bankruptcies and the irritations and the disappointments which will ever putting a cup of aloes to your lip. The furrowed wrinkles on your face are hieroglyphics which, if deciphered, would make out a thrilling story of trouble. The footstep of the rabbit is seen the next morning on the snow, and on the white hairs of the aged are the footprints showing where swift trouble alighted.

My subject, in the first place, teaches us that it is no compliment to us if we escape great trial. The fitches and the cummin on one, thrashing floor might look over to the corn on another thrashing floor, and say, look at that poor, miserable bruised corn! We have only been a little pounded, but that has been almost destroyed." Well, the corn, if it had lips, would answer and say: "Do you know the reason you have not been as much thrashed as I have? It is because you are not of so much worth as I am. If you were, you would be as severely thrashed as I am. Your trial is over. You there are men who suppose they are the Lord's favorites simply because their barns are full and their bank account is full and there are no funerals in the house. It may be because they are fitches and cummin, while down on the floor of the poor widow may be the Lord's corn. You are but little pounded because you are not worth much. I am bruised and ground because she is the best part of the harvest. The heft of the thrashing machine is according to the value of the grain. If you have not been much thrashed in life, perhaps there is not much to thrash! If you have not been much shaken of trouble, perhaps it is because there is nothing to be shaken out. If you have the venomous snake on Paul's hand, and the pounding of him with stones until he was taken up for dead, and the jamming against him of prison gates, and Ephesian vociferation, and shipwreck almost by the painful stocks, and the foundering of the Alexandrian corn ship, and the murderous stroke of the Roman sheriff—to bring Paul to his proper development. By the carelessness of the thrashing man we always conclude the value of the grain.

Next, my text teaches us that God proportions our trials to what we can bear—the staff for the fitches, the rod for the cummin, the iron sled for the corn. Sometimes people in great trouble say, "Oh, I can't bear it!" But you did bear it. God would not have sent upon you if he had not known that you could bear it. You trembled and you sank, but you got through. God will not let one hair fall from your head, tear too many hor from your lungs one sigh too deep nor from your temples one throb too sharp. There is not a dollar of bad debts on your ledger or a disappointment about goods that you expected to get up, but you have gone down, or a swindle of your business partner or a trick on the part of those who are in the same kind of business that you are, but God intends to overrule for your immortal help. "Oh," you say, "I am afraid I shall lose my way to me. I don't like to be cheated and outraged." Neither does the corn like to be thrashed, and it has been thrashed and winnowed it has a great deal better opinion of winnowing mills and corn threshers.

"Well," you say, "if I could choose my troubles, I would be willing to be trouble sometimes, but I would like not be trouble. You would choose some thing that would not hurt, and unless a man can choose his troubles he can't perform perhaps may be children-ness. You are fond of children. You say, 'Why does God send children into that other household, where they are unwelcome and are beaten and banged about, when I would have taken them in the arms of affection?" You say, "Any other trial but this." Your trial perhaps is a violent temper, and you have to drive it like six unbroken horses amid the gunpowder explosions of a great holiday, and ever and anon it runs away with you. Your trial is the asthma. You say, "If it were rheumatism or neuralgia or erysipelas, but it is this asthma, and it is such an exhausting thing to breathe." Your trouble is a husband, sharp, snappy and cross about the house and raising a small riot because a button is off. How could you know the button is off? Your trial is a wife ever in contest with the servants, and she is a slover. Though she was very careful about her appearance in your presence once, now she is careless, because, she says, her fortune is made! Your trial is a hard school lesson you cannot learn and you have bitten your finger nails until they are a sight to be hold.

Everybody has some vexation or annoyance or trial, and he or she thinks it is the one least adapted. "Anything but this," all say; "anything but this."

My hearer, are you not ashamed to be complaining all this time against God? Who manages the affairs of this world anyhow? Is it an Infinite Mood or a Sitting Bull savage or an omnipotent Nana Sahib? No; it is the most merciful and glorious and wise being in all the universe. You cannot outchain omnipotence anything. You have fretted and worried almost enough. Do you not think so? Some of you are making yourselves ridiculous in the sight of the angels. Here is a naval architect, and he draws out the plan of a ship of many thousand tons. Many workmen are engaged on it for a long while. The ship is done, and some day, with the flags up and the air gorgeous with bunting, the vessel is launched for Southampton. At that time a lad six years of age comes running down the dock with a toy boat which he has made with his own jackknife, and he says: "Here, my boat is better than yours. Just look at this jibboom and those weather crosslack braces." And the tops his little boat beside the great ship, and there is a roar of laughter on the decks! Ah, my friends, that great ship is your life as God planned it—vast, million toned, ocean destined, eternity bound! That little boat is your life as you were trying to hew it out and fashion it and launch it. Do not try to be a rival of the great Jehovah. God is always right, and in nine cases out of ten you are wrong. He knows what kind of grain you are, and he sends the right kind of thrashing machine. It will be rod or staff or cummin wheel just according as you are fitches or cummin or corn.

Again, my subject teaches that God keeps trial on us until we let go. The farmer shouts "Whoa!" to his horses as soon as the grain is dropped from the stalk. The farmer comes with his fork and tosses up the straw, and he sees that the straw has let go the grain and the grain is thoroughly thrashed. So God. Smiting rod and turning wheel both cease as soon as we let go. We started under the delusion that this was a great world. We learned out of our geography that it was so many thousand miles in diameter, and so many miles in circumference, and we said, "Oh, my, what a world!" Trouble came in after life, and this world was sliced off one part of the world, and it has got to be a smaller world and in some estimations a very insignificant world, and it is depreciating all the time as a spiritual property. Ten per cent off, 50 per cent off, and there are those who would not give 10 cents for this world—the entire world—as a soul possession.

We thought that friendship was a grand thing. It always used to write compositions about friendship, and perhaps we made our graduating speech on commencement day on friendship. Oh, it was a charming thing! But does it mean as much to you as it used to? You have gone out in life, and one friend has betrayed you, and another friend has misinterpreted you, and another friend has neglected you, and friendship comes now sometimes to mean to you merely another ax to grind. So with money. We thought if a man had a competency he was safe for all the future, but we have learned that a mortgage may be defeated by an unknown prevarication or circumstance, that signing your name on the back of a note may be going to be a very small thing to cost you your business death warrant; that a man in mid life may change the current of his trade; that a man may be rich to-day and poor to-morrow. And God, by all these misfortunes, is getting us down to our grip, but we still hold on. God smites with a staff, but we hold on. God smites with a rod, but we still hold on. And he sends over us the iron wheel of misfortune, but we hold on. There are men who keep their grip on this world until the last moment, who suggest to me the condition and conduct of the poor Indian in a boat in the Niagara rapids, coming on toward the fall. Seeing that he cannot possibly escape, a moment or two before he got to the verge of the plunge he lifted a wine-bottle—and drank it off and then tossed the bottle into the air. So there are men who clutch the world, and they go down through the rapids of temptation and sin, and they hold on to the very last moment to life, drinking to their eternal ruin as they go over and down. Oh, let go! Let go! The best fortunes are in heaven. There are no impending cashiers from that bank, no failing in promises to pay. Set your affections on things above, not on things on the earth. Let go! Depend upon it that God will keep upon you the iron wheel of the Iron or the iron sled until you do let go.

Another thing my text teaches us is that God's people in this world have a sore terminus. My text says, "Bread corn is bruised because he will not ever be thrashing it." Blessed be God for that! Pound away, O flail! Turn on, O wheel! Your work will be finished when it will not ever be thrashing it!" So much of us as is wheat will be separated from so much as is chaff, and there will be no more need of pounding, they never cry is heaven because they have nothing to cry about. There are no tears of bereavement, for you shall have your friends all round about you. There are no tears of poverty because each one sits at the King's table and has his own chariot of sal

...Advice to Wo-
...By Mrs. E. Sailer.

Mrs. PINKHAM:—When I ...what I was known as ...had two years' suf-...ing heat, and as quick ...I had no appetite ...never could tell for ...

MRS. E. SAILER,
President German Relief Association, Los Angles, Cal.

...a day at a time how I would feel the next day. Five bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound changed all that, my days became days of health, and I have enjoyed every day since now six years.

"We have used considerable of your Vegetable Compound in our charitable work, as we find that to restore a poor mother to health so she can support herself and those dependent upon her, if such there be, is truer charity than to give other aid. You have my hearty endorsement, for you have proven yourself a true friend to suffering women."—Mrs. E. SAILER, 756½ Hill St., Los Angeles, Cal. $5000 forfeit if above testimonial is not genuine.

No other person can give such helpful advice to women who are sick as can Mrs. Pinkham, for no other has had such great experience—her address is Lynn, Mass., and her advice free—if you are sick write her—you are foolish if you don't.

Many of the jewels in the diadem of friendship are after all very small, yet very precious.

CONSUMPTION

THE "SPECS" THAT FITTED.

Incident That Convinced an Old Farmer His Eyes Were Used.

An old man, who has nearly attained the biblical limit of threescore and ten years, was in a West Duluth drug store recently, endeavoring to find a pair of spectacles to fit his eyes. Somehow the old pair he had worn for ten years were playing out—or else his eyes were. He couldn't account for it, but it was getting harder for him to see comfortably with them every day, and he finally decided that he must purchase a new pair.

He explained to the clerk what he wanted, and then the small stock carried was ransacked in an effort to find the right thing. It was a long job. Everything tried on blurred, the one with strong magnifying power as well as that with practically none.

The clerk finally gave it up and advised the old gentleman to see an optician. He "allowed" so, too, but continued to paw over the glasses and try them on in a hopeless sort of way while the clerk attended to something else.

Suddenly the latter was attracted to the customer by an exclamation of satisfaction. "By gosh, I've got her!" he shouted, and the clerk turned around to see the old man with the "specs" on his nose, testing them on a newspaper.

It was a frame only, both lenses having been taken out.

"I kin see better'n I could ten years ago," continued the old fellow, exultingly, and just then he raised his hand to take them off, and he put his finger through the hole where the lens was supposed to be.

His look of astonishment was a study but the result was that he decided his second sight had arrived, and he hasn't worn a pair of "specs" since.

A Very Strong Letter.

La Farge, Wis. Wm. T. Payne of this place has written a rather startling letter to the papers. He says:

"I was in great pain across my back for four weeks, and was taking medicine from a doctor all the time, but it did not do any good at all.

"I bought a box of Dodd's Kidney Pills, and had not taken more than four or five doses before I noticed that they were doing me good.

"They helped me right along, and I kept on using them till I had used four boxes when the pain left me altogether. One box of Dodd's Kidney Pills has done me more good than five dollars worth of doctor's medicine."

"This remedy has certainly worked wonders in my case, and I feel it my duty to give it the credit due."

A Tribune for the Coronation.

The Rev. E. N. Warren, the head master of Eton, is an enthusiast on everything connected with ships and rowing, and he is especially interested in the number of yachts and launches in existence. He is promising to build a classic ship, probably a trireme of the Punic or best Attic period, and to moor it in the river opposite the terrace of the Houses of Parliament during the coronation week. It would seem more appropriate that such a vessel should take part in the great coronation naval review, and that all low Englishmen to compare a man-of-war of ancient Greece with a modern fleet does hardly occur to them. The trireme would, of course, be propelled by oars, some thirty rowers on each side being required. It will be interesting to see Dr. Warre's practical solution of the problem of the trireme and the way in which the men in the top tier ply their oars.

Big Industries Built up on Small Articles.

Few people realize the wants and requirements of the thirty millions of people in the United States. Who would think that a patented mucilage bottle could have capital to carry on the package dye business in this country, and that there are hundreds of other articles in the United States that are made to keep their business going? Mucilage bottles are among the most important articles of commerce. When you know what is required in the construction of a bottle to prevent the contents of same from drying up, leaking out, etc., you will realize that it would not pay to make a bottle to hold mucilage unless it was done on a large scale. The mucilage bottle industry is one of the many small businesses.

HUSSARS OF DEATH

BY PAUL OVERT.

(COPYRIGHT, 1901, BY DAILY STORY PUB. CO.)

The horses pulled and tugged at the bit and tossed their heads impatiently. The clanking of sword and scabbard began to lull my mind, and my eyelids began to droop. Through the light gray of the early morning, the figures of the troopers looked ghostlike and shadowy as they moved rhythmatically with the motion of their mounts, and the low hum of voices came to my ears as from afar. The soft, sucking thud of the horse's hoofs on the corduroy road, acting with the easy mist that hung over the valley, began to send a feeling of drowsiness over me, and my eyes slowly closed. The world had been shut out from my view but a moment, when I became conscious of something riding beside me, something cold and silent, and in a moment my eyes flew open.

The men were just as I had last seen them, and for a moment I laughed at my sudden fears. But gradually an object black, silent and mournful, began to close in upon me, and even as I looked, figure after figure began to spread throughout the troop until there were thousands of them riding amongst us.

I looked at the one cantering beside me. He seemed to breathe a cold dampness, and involuntarily I wrapped my military cloak closer round my body. He was black from his skull-tight cap and loose coat, to the powerful charger he rode—a deathly black. He was tall and gaunt, and in the light breeze that had sprung up, his clothes flapped loosely about his bony frame, and his horse, though galloping alongside of mine, gave no sound as its hoofs struck the road. An orderly came riding from the rear, and rode straight for him. A wizened face was on my lips when, to my horror, the trooper swept past, having ridden through my companion as though he were nothing but air. For a moment I reeled unsteadily in my saddle, but a grim chuckle brought me to myself, and I sat upright to find what had once been a human face staring at me. It needed but a glance at those sunken hollows and whitened bones to tell me I was looking at a skeleton.

"Who are you?" I muttered.

The one in black broke into another chuckle. "We," he said, indicating the others with a sweep of his shadowy arm, "are the Hussars of Death."

I shuddered, and swerved my horse from the phantom. But in an instant, without any visible effort, he forged his charger over to my side.

"We'll have work here to-day," he croaked, "work, work."

I shivered slightly, and glanced at a low, flat line far down the valley, and through the rising mists, thought I could distinguish the gleam of a cannon. So these were the trenches we were to charge. Even as I looked, a white puff, a dull boom and the shriek of a shell, awoke the echoes of the distant hills. And the Hussars of Death had work to do.

At my elbow a bugle blew, but I scarcely heard or understood the notes. I saw a thousand right arms bend, and heard the scraping of steel on tin, and in a moment a thousand blades flashed in the air, breathing defiance at the smoke ahead.

Around me I could dimly see strained and bloodless faces, trying to look encouragement at one another. But my eyes were not for them. Far as the eye could reach were hosts of black figures, contorting and writhing in silent glee, waiting but for the signal to begin their work.

Out from the works ahead leaped a tongue of flame, to be followed by a shriek of agony. Through a rift in the vapor I caught a momentary glimpse of a trooper laying in the road, the ghastly multitude surrounding him in exultation.

The first Hussar of Death clattered the one in black, clicking his horrible jaws together, "our first recruit."

His words, and the sight of the man set my brain afire and gripping the bridle-rein in one hand, I rose in my stirrups and swung my sabre for his head. The sword passed through him as it would have passed through space, and I fell back in my saddle sick at heart, his mocking laugh ringing in my ears.

The bugle blew the charge, and the blades flashed higher and brighter in the morning sun. Forward swept the troop, onward swept the phantoms.

Hussars of Death.

The shot and shell tore gaping holes in our ranks, and as each man went down, a host of twisting spirits gathered around him, their long bony hands clapping round their frames and blowing back every now and then to disclose a framework of whitened bones. And the trooper, finally stiffened out his distorted body, a new form sprang up in their ranks, and the ghostly throng passed on.

Sick and disheartened I rode, the black nightmare swaying around me with the life of battle. I saw the flash of shell before my eyes, and indistinctly heard out my sabre. The blade struck something soft and yielding, and once more I drew back my arm. I saw the Hussars sweeping down upon something red in the road in front of me.

The blood curdled in my veins with horror. Again came a white flash before me, but my arms lay as though dead at my side. With fearful fascination I saw it rise before my eyes and begin the powerful downward stroke. Then came a shock. For a moment I reeled, and then began to sink, down, down, down. A white face leered at me, a hollow voice sounded in my ears. And to the words of, "another recruit," my senses left me and all became black.

When once more my reason returned the night had fallen, and the stars blinked down upon a desolate field. By the dim light of the early moon, the wrecked overturned cannons and the still, silent forms threw dark suggestive shadows on the ground, chilling the mind with a hundred wild, dark thoughts. Over in the north a soli-

"The Hussars of Death were gone," tary dog lifted its head and howled dismally.

I closed my eyes and tried to think, but a rustle by my side startled me, and I looked up to find, surrounding me, the Hussars of Death.

I had seen men that day reel and fall from their saddles, feebly try to raise their sword-arm, and falling, with their last breathe curse their Maker. I had seen men torn to shot and shell calling upon their God for mercy, and dying with a smile on their lips. And then in desperation I prayed, each word a burning hope, petitioning Him that gave me life to spare me from that ghastly throng. And gradually my fears left me, a peace came over my torn and wretched soul, and I fell asleep.

It was morning when I awoke. For down the valley the helmets of our defeated, retreating army, glittered. But I was happy, for the Hussars of Death were gone.

Treat Catarrh in Spring.

The spring is the time to treat catarrh. Cold, wet winter weather often retards a cure of catarrh. If a course of Peruna is taken during the early spring months the cure will be prompt and permanent. There can be no failures if Peruna is taken intelligently during the favorable weather of spring.

As a systemic catarrh remedy Peruna eradicates catarrh from the system wherever it may be located. It cures catarrh of the stomach or bowels with the same certainty as catarrh of the head.

If you do not derive prompt and satisfactory results from the use of Peruna, write at once to Dr. Hartman, giving a full statement of your case and he will be pleased to give you his valuable advice gratis.
