The Value of Encouragement A word of encouragement is always the most profilable of inves Nothing else returns so great divi-dende. Julian Legrand, the Paris merchant, never tired of telling how, in the panic of 1857, his firm was on he brink of certain failure for lach of £20,000, which for two days he had tried in vain to raise. The crisis was at hand, when a stranger enterod his office and offered him the ne ed sum on his personal note without interest. . Legrand had been member of a school committee years before and, not praising merely the rich boys, had gone to a certain near lad commended him for his work in the examination, and told better if he tried. That had been the turning point in the poor boy's life, and now he had come to repay. in part, the debt he owed for that one word of encouragement.

Chief Business of the Church Any tool or instrument is at its best only when it is doing that which it was designed to do. "OZER THE LONG D "Over the Long Divite!" With anxious thought Man has an answer to this question sought, What lies beyond? 'The entire human race, Chaldea, Syria, Egypt, Greece and Rome. Have crossed the crest to an unfattiomed home Nor knew the semblance of that dwelling place That waited them; with portals dark and wide Beyond the summit of the Long Divide.

Over the Long Divide! the endless stream Of passing mortals leave us but their dreams, The Hindoo of Nirvana, while on fields Elysian The Greek and Roman sported, and the souls Of Odin's warriors drained their: wassail howls;

Bainf John in his Apocalyptic vision Bland choral symphonies, resounding wide From golden harps, beyond the Long Divide. Beyond the Long Divide, the Indian found Wide prairie spread, a happy hunting ground: No dreams agreed, Hope colored every thought Eternal Hope! the only gift of heaven Left in the casket by Pandora riven Although no answering message she has brought.

The Bridge at Antietam. Describing a visit recently made to the battlefield of Antletam, a writer in the Boston Journal says: "The visitor will find the Burnside bridge in practically the same condi-tion as at the time of the battle. Near to leave the town without a pass, the bridge on the eastern side of the Antietam some of the large willow trees have rotted away, but the bridge-a substantial stone structure, fanked at either end with monuments commemorating the heroism of those who fell in that hopeless attempt to hold the bridge while the bluffs at the western end were held , by the
