
TIME TO GET A DAWDYER.

Texas's Remark Rather Reflected on Michigan Methods.

Some years ago, when Texas was booming, a number of Michigan farmers went down to look over the land. Among them was a man who had a reputation for being a hustler. He was a man who always drove on a trot, and was never known to walk his horse. He was also a man who always drove on a trot, and was never known to walk his horse. He was also a man who always drove on a trot, and was never known to walk his horse. He was also

King Peter is preparing for his coronation by taking a Prussian spiral every day.

J. Pierpont Morgan is another sufferer from the malady known as millionaire's stomach.

A woman is willing to take the benefit of the doubt and let nine have the credit of the suicides.

Fort Arthur seems to fall as easily and as often as a man who is trying to quit smoking cigarettes.

Millions have laughed at Mark Twain's comic humor. Millions grieve with him in his present sorrow.

There's no use crying over spilt milk. The better way is to order the harvest hands to gather the damage.

A new Galveston greets the eye of the traveler. On the crumbling stone of its dead self it has risen to higher things.

The war has shed no ill-bright of its own, but it has shed much. Indeed Alfred Austin has written a jovial ode about it.

Oxford university is going to call for the degree of doctor of letters on the author of "Who made an Alcott cent book?"

No wonder these railway engineers who save big Hocking Valley ground to pieces under his locomotive has wish by beat his nerves.

Jack White has won the British championship at billiards. Now for a strenuous effort to get him to play pool.

When that $1,000,000 coal road is formed you will be startled more by the number of millionaires in the list than by the number of miles in the road.

The terrestrial globe is more the delight of the youngster than ever since Secretary Hay has put the boundary lines of Russia and Japan on it.

He laughs best who can take a joke on himself. Mr. Bryan has proved that he can laugh at a joke on Mr. Parker that would have to be explained to people of average intelligence.

A New York paper is offering a prize for the best recitation suggestion. We have heard that it is a good thing to recite slowly at home and take a rest.

King Peter of Servia announces that he is going to have a coronation in August. Summer is the season of innocent bystanders so they say.

One Nicholas has fallen in line with financial reformers and has issued a $5 check. Two Nicholases used a $5 check for a cocktail when the gas bill brought the trouble.

The New York Herald urges the establishment of a school for writers of fiction, but what is really needed is a school for people who want to get to work early in the morning.

An Iowa man after eating five cakes at his wife's quilting party died in convulsions. Another case of the fact that there was no sheet anchor to windward.

The cable has divided at that borough and appointed to be given again. Nobody can tell how far the rod should go. Some people don't know when they've got to be taught.

The Boston Globe protests that G. A. R. encampments were free of error, which demonstrated what kind of a man Editor Grady must have been educated with.

The military of Siberia was at Port Arthur when the Japanese landed. The regiment of New York should be called to the defense of the city and the battery of Sleepy Hollow to the defense of Siberia.

S. W. Gillet is after the people of the country to wipe out consumption. He says that Gov. Odell didn't. Then what was that Odell didn't? Then what was that Odell didn't?

The Kansas editor who has been sentenced to six months in jail for libel has the satisfaction of knowing that he has made a name for himself. Many a man has gone to jail for less.

Mark White has won the British championship at billiards. Now for a strenuous effort to get him to play pool.

At Peabody the roads and sidewalks are to be laid by the prisoners. Is that why Peabody is so famous for its roads?

Icons Works of Art

Members of the Greek church of Russian descent are not forbidden, but they are rebuked to what an unfriendly critic has described as an ingenious evasion of an ecclesiastical prohibition. They do not carve a figure out of marble or shape it in bronze, but they paint the face, hands and perhaps the feet of a saint on wood and form the robes by means of metal work in relief. The likeness of the saint is not infrequently enameled and in some cases the drapery is studded with precious stones. Sometimes a number of any size, value are not, as a rule, to be found in churches, though sometimes images of the saints are clothed with raiment from the kaross of those who come to pray before them.

In the nineteenth century there was a great demand in Russia for portable icons, and those from northern of a size known as the old believers, who, as they were under the ban of a persecuted people, had to adapt the church and they would carry about and conceal with ease. Only Russian patience, perhaps, could have proved equal to the task of producing the delicately worked and almost microscopic objects that specially became popular—a last judgment, for instance, represented on a background of a few square inches—but according to some critics it is in these things that Russian art is seen at its best. Small icons are sometimes found on soldiers killed in war.

Icons may represent anything from the figure of a saint to a historical scene, such as a martyrdom. Often they take the form of a diptych, or a triptych, or a polyptych covered with a number of miniature figures of saints or miniature scenes from the life of a saint. Virgin and some other biblical personages. From the number of scenes contained in these objects the possessor has a right to call them "polyglots." But there were not many pictorial representations within the church itself, for such images may be of large size, carved in bas relief, and sometimes ornamented with enamels.

Work for Every Hour

I know a gentleman New York city—a popular lawyer in all social circles—who is up at 5 o'clock in the morning and after taking exercise is ready for breakfast at 8 o'clock. His secretary and his stenographer await him. Dictation begins at seven of the month outline of a day's work is mapped out. Then the telephone and telegraph instruments have been diligently tuned up and pushed with the most unremitting energy. Then the most wonderful and more minute attention to the demands of unlimited advance at

Had Beer to Spare

Brewers in Germany have a surplus of beer which they are unable to dispose of, and they have petitioned the Kaiser to permit them to export it free of duty. The Kaiser has refused, and the brewers are in a pretty mess. Their only hope is that the Kaiser will change his mind.

The reason and only reason for the refusal is that the Kaiser is afraid that if the beer is exported free of duty it will be sold cheaper than it is now sold in Germany, and the people will drink more beer. The Kaiser is afraid that if the people drink more beer they will become more intelligent, and more intelligent people are not to the liking of the Kaiser. He wants his people to be ignorant and submissive, and he knows that beer makes people intelligent and independent. Therefore he will not allow the brewers to export their beer free of duty.

The Kaiser's action is a striking illustration of the fact that the rulers of Europe are afraid of the people becoming intelligent. They are afraid that if the people become intelligent they will not be willing to be ruled by the few. They are afraid that if the people become intelligent they will not be willing to be taxed to support the few in luxury and idleness. They are afraid that if the people become intelligent they will not be willing to be robbed by the few. They are afraid that if the people become intelligent they will not be willing to be ground down to poverty and misery by the few. They are afraid that if the people become intelligent they will not be willing to be treated as slaves by the few. They are afraid that if the people become intelligent they will not be willing to be treated as serfs by the few. They are afraid that if the people become intelligent they will not be willing to be treated as beasts of burden by the few. They are afraid that if the people become intelligent they will not be willing to be treated as cattle by the few. They are afraid that if the people become intelligent they will not be willing to be treated as dogs by the few. They are afraid that if the people become intelligent they will not be willing to be treated as hogs by the few. They are afraid that if the people become intelligent they will not be willing to be treated as sheep by the few. They are afraid that if the people become intelligent they will not be willing to be treated as asses by the few. They are afraid that if the people become intelligent they will not be willing to be treated as mules by the few. They are afraid that if the people become intelligent they will not be willing to be treated as jackasses by the few. They are afraid that if the people become intelligent they will not be willing to be treated as fools by the few. They are afraid that if the people become intelligent they will not be willing to be treated as idiots by the few. They are afraid that if the people become intelligent they will not be willing to be treated as imbeciles by the few. They are afraid that if the people become intelligent they will not be willing to be treated as lunatics by the few. They are afraid that if the people become intelligent they will not be willing to be treated as maniacs by the few. They are afraid that if the people become intelligent they will not be willing to be treated as madmen by the few. They are afraid that if the people become intelligent they will not be willing to be treated as crazy men by the few. They are afraid that if the people become intelligent they will not be willing to be treated as insane men by the few. They are afraid that if the people become intelligent they will not be willing to be treated as demented men by the few. They are afraid that if the people become intelligent they will not be willing to be treated as deranged men by the few. THURSDAY, JUNE 30, 1904.

There was a noisy thunder storm last night, but very little rain accompanied it.

Jackson rural mail carriers will petition congress for an advance of $250 a year for next year.

Drs. Floyd Austin of Brooklyn and G. L. Kuhl of Saline, attended the state dental association at Lansing, Wednesday.

Stella Kingsley McColl made a visit upon Ann Arbor friends one day last week, Tuesday and received about 40 samples of milk which he tested and found that some was watered.

The "under the oaks" celebration at Jackson on Wednesday, July 6, gives promise of being a big thing. The railroads will run special trains to accommodate the thousands of people who wish to be present. Manchester will send a good delegation.

Prof. Albert W. Dorr, who has been filling a vacancy in the Methodist church the past year, received a surprise upon his relatives and friends here, and entered the ranks of Benedicts June 15 by marrying Miss Cora Spangler of Evanspord, O. Mr. Dorr brought his bride home last week and they will spend the summer on the old home farm south-east of town.

The Mr. Earl spoken of as manager of the insurance office on the 11th floor of Detroit Chamber of Commerce building, where Chas. Sweyze, ex-superintendent of the house of correction lost the terrible encounter with Miss Alvord, and from the window dropped to his death in the street below, is the Herbert Earle, nephew of Mr. Geo. Haeussler of this village.

The editor and C. J. Van Every spent last Friday very pleasantly with Mr. & Mrs. Thomas Holmes and at Lowe's lake, fishing. This lake is the property of the cement company and the fish we caught were a little larger than the dividends stockholders have received from the company so far, but Tom says it's pretty early to get big ones. We are not at all discouraged for we believe there is just as big fish in the lake as have ever been caught and if there is not, there is plenty of room there and the company will get good returns from it.

As there seemed to be nothing doing in any of the surrounding towns on the 4th of July, and the military band had no engagement, the boys decided to have something right here at home. They secured Schmidt's grove and will celebrate there, providing music, sports and refreshments galore. Of course they will have a dance and wind up with fireworks. They have engaged the Saxton band to assist them and expect that they will bring all their friends with them. They promise a street parade, and a ball game in the forenoon between Jackson and Manchester and one with Tecumseh in the afternoon.

Ordination and Re-dedication Services.

On Sunday, July 3, there will occur at the First Universalist church an event of mutual importance and interest, the ordination of the pastor, Miss Blanche Yocum.

It has been several years since ordination services have been held in this place and the increased spirit manifesting the preparations for the occasion makes them in harmony with the sacred place where the beautiful and impressive service will be rendered.

The ordination sermon will be delivered by the Rev. George B. Stocking D. D. of Lansing and he will be ably assisted by Rev. E. L. Moon of the M. E. church, Rev. Wm. S. J. Woodman of New Rev. Rev. C. P. Nash of Holly and Rev. O. E. Olin, Oh. D. Buchtel college, Akron, O.

The special music for the occasion is being carefully prepared under the direction of Miss Jessie Kimble, assisted by a quartette consisting of Mesdames Fred Freeman and Earle Chase and Dr. E. A. Tracy and Wm. Krause. This is to be supplemented by soloists among whom will be Hugo Kirchhofer and others from abroad, personal friends of Miss Young.

For some time the members of the society of their pastor have been contemplating the necessity and the desirableness of thoroughly renovating and remodeling the "little church round the corner." Through splendid patronage of the members and the many kind friends outside of the church and the hearty cooperation and enthusiastic spirit of the pastor inspiring them, the work has been faithfully and successfully accomplished.

As a fitting close to the day of sacred work the church will be re-dedicated at the evening service; the dedicatory sermon will be delivered by Rev. Dr. Olin of Buchtel college assisted by the same clergymen of the morning. A special musical program is being prepared.

CHAPTER IX.

An Astonishing Discovery.

With the instinct that is the heritage of the sex, Olga Karnicheff knew that the man she had married was a monster before the ministers of the church had descended from the steps and, removing the orders that, which has been carefully replaced when the door was closed after Ivan's entrance, stood silently for a moment.

"Without there!" he asked. "What do you want?"

"Administer!" was the prompt reply.

"For object at this hour?"

"Speech with you!"

Ivan glanced once more about the room.

Then with the single word "Enter!" he flung the door wide open.

The tall, elderly, dried man in the doorway no longer and then without a moment's hesitation entered and, ascending the stairs, disappeared the apartment.

Ivan closing the door descended and ordered the tall face with a stranger, whom he saw not, with keener interest.

Now, sir, the object of this visit?" asked Ivan as he pointed to a chair.

The stranger ignored the courtesy and speaking in the remarkably perfunctory manner of a man accustomed to commanding others, drew a chair around the room, fixed his eyes upon Ivan. "I seek information of a young girl—"

Ivan could not repress a slight start of surprise; but he managed with an effort to keep his face from betraying the final glance of the stranger.

"Her name?"

"Olga Karnicheff." As he uttered the words the stranger substituted the great coat which enveloped him in the clothing of the ordinary gentleman of fashion. Then with an easy indifference, he threw himself into the chair with the air of one who considers himself to take possession and was best upon remaining of a long stay.

"Try and be more explicit," Ivan replied.

"Because," was the quick reply, "she was seen to enter this house and has not since left it. So I am told."

"Seen to enter this house!"

Ivan's eyes flashed. "Why I ask by what right you question me as to who I may or may not admit to my house?"

"Because," was the answer, "I am the agent of the police and will give to one who refuses to answer all questions that I may demand."

Ivan's face became livid with anger. He was about to explain; he said, what fault the people of Mile. Karnicheff was not only dear as Olga—

"Stop!" he exclaimed, as he turned to Alexis with a look of command. "You are a man—a soldier—not a diplomatic mouthful you. Tell it at once; I am tired of this! Has Olga Karnicheff been here?"

"She has!"

"Then why do you not say so? Why this mystery? Why this—"

Here a quick gesture of the hand from the stranger caused Ivan to look up with a look of profound amazement and fear, and there appeared at the top of the stairs a man whose face was concealed by a mask. In his hand he held a revolver, which he pointed at Ivan.

"Good God!" exclaimed Alexis, "has it come to this?"

It is time," replied Ivan. "Shall be considered a fool. There is no mistake. Put up your weapon. I am Ivan Karnicheff, and I am here to you."

"Ah!" exclaimed the stranger, "I am glad to hear you say that. Then you will not object to my searching the house?"

"Search the house!" Ivan's face was a picture of astonishment.

It was now the turn of Alexis to be astonished at the unexpected interest of events. "Eh?" he replied.

"Colonel Alexis Nastimoff went on Ivan, speaking as if to claim acquaintance, "I am Colonel Alexis Nastimoff. The order is a fair warrant of the authority of the chief of police."

"Ah!" the astonished Ivan replied.

"Here is a still further warrant," the stranger went on, as he drew from his pocket a paper and handed it to Ivan. "You see it is signed by the chief of police. You will see that I am to search the house."

Ivan looked at the paper, and then with a look of profound astonishment at Alexis, and then at the stranger, he said:

"Search my house! Why, I am a—"

"Soldier!" said the stranger, "and I am a soldier. Therefore, I am sure you will not object to my searching the house."

"Object!" Ivan replied. "Why should I object? I have nothing to conceal. Search the Text, I Kings 12:1-20. Memory verses, 16, 17. Golden Text, Prov. 29:25.

I. The Kingdom that Solomon Left; a Great Opportunity.—A wise son we feasted the history of the Israelites through the wanderings of Egypt and the peaceful rule of Solomon. At his death, about 975 B. C., he was the richest monarch and most powerful king of his time. He became a magnificent empire.

Solomon's successes are said to have been much greater than Hezekiah's. No other nation was as wealthy and commerce flourished with all the rich marts of the world.

Every young man has a kingdom in his own heart. He may throw away half of it or all of it in the same way Rehoboam did. Possible following his backcoming ruin. He may take the advice of fools and the Bible, and become monarch of all the rich possibilities God has placed in his life.

II. Rehoboam, the Young Man that Had the Opportunity.

His name means "enlarger of the people," because he diminished of his nation.

His age at his coronation is given as 41 in 2 Chron. 12:13, which, as commentators, however, think he was 21 at his coronation. Rehoboam was weak and unwise. It is to be noted that Solomon had a thousand wives, but only one son, and he was a fool. Solomon's life is the human abode foolish sons rectify (Prov. 10:1; 15; 17:21; 19:13).

III. Jeroboam: Another Young Man with an Opportunity.—I Kings 11:26-40. The great opponent of Rehoboam. He had several prominent figure in the national crisis. A young man of unusual ability before him—head of foreign origin.

1. His Personal Character. It was the natural tendency of Rehoboam's days to encourage those tendencies in Jeroboam that were inimical to the welfare of the nation. Jeroboam was a man of great energy. He was the builder of the fortifications by which the king sought to make Jerusalem impregnable. In this latter work Jeroboam was so industrious and capable that the king made him head over the Ephraim and Manasseh.

2. The People's Discontent. This had several causes, (a) The northern tribes, by the terms of Rehoboam's accession to Solomon's throne, had become jealous of the new dynasty and its favors. It is to be noted that Solomon had a thousand wives, but only one son, and he was a fool. Solomon's folly in marrying so many
