HIS LONG SINEWY FATOLR

Kismet brought Capt. Graham Chicago at the same time to sell to Hoppington the baby orchid. Kismet placed them in hotels but a block apart and Kismet engineered their meeting on Michigan boulevard. Would she share his box at the opera that night? Yes, she had nothing to conceal, nothing to be ashamed of, and a neglected wife's right to do as she pleased If her husband was aware of her presence in the city. he aware of her presence in the city, he had not intimated it. Over the supper table after the theater she told him all, even the name of the man who had ruined her life. "Hang it. let's have it over with tonight!" the captain blurted. "Til go out there with you. Beastly hour to call, but I have the orchid, and that will be sufficient excuse for my visit." So she yielded to his plan and they took a carriage and drove out to Hop-pington's home, laying their plans on the way. They drove past the house once before stopping, as there already was a carriage at the door. As they did so they saw the door, open and Hoppington in the light tidding an over affectionate good night to a rather flashily dressed young wonan, who then flew down the steps, jumped into the cab, and was driven quickly away. "And that." Lady Evelyn had said, laying her hand on Capt. Graham's arm, "is why I am cast off."

"And that." again interrupted Clarke, "is why he drugged his servants and locked up his maids."

Then they executed their coup. Capt. Graham went in first, leaving the counters in the carriage and gain-ing easy admittance through the po-tency of the name of the baby partment. The tin box that Mr. Car-penter reached from the safe the other the captain got Hoppington out of the room for a moment while he signaled and admitted the countess. When Hoppington returned he found himself face to face with his wife. The orchid seller was gone.
