There is no way to detect them and they will not give them-selves up. And who can blame them? A murderer is not more hounded than a leper. A burglar is treated with far more consideration than a man who has leprosy. These, 5,000 or more innocent men are keeping the awful secret of THE LAPER their disease within their own hearts because nowhere in the land is there a decent asylum where they can go and receive a white man's care.

New York has a leper ward on Blackwell's island. An HOME American would find it, worse than a medieval dungeon.

Louisiana has her lazarette and an average man should be pardoned for shooting himself rather than go there. Every other part of the country will drive the leper from spot to spot like a dog. Yet leprosy is not a grewsome disease. The tales that are told in fiction and the traditions that have been handed down from ancient. times are responsible for the ignorance and dread one has for the disease.

Yet to be a lener to-day is to be an outcast from the world.

On Blackwell's island in New York there are four leners. They enjoy a sort of liberty. They are within 50 feet of a green hospital, where 1,300 sick are cared for. They see hundreds of people every day and no wall is built about them. They can walk about the island as they wish, and they are well treated. For them it is all right. But they are three Chinamen and a Pole. They all sleep in one room; they all cat in one room. What would become of an American !! he had to share that same room with them for the rest of his life? Yet there is no other place. FATHER DAMEN ing to advertise the fact and untithe final stages of the disease none but an expert can detect it. The writer has seen cases that look to be only a slight skin affection and if a doctor had not accidentally, in treating the cases for an entirely different complaint, dis-covered the disease, they would still be at liberty and probably ignorant themselves of their afflic-tion. Norwegians, Swedes and the Chinese are the greatest sufferare large colonies of lepers.

States cannot do it, for there are not enough known cases, but it is predicted that if the government, more to open an asplain hundreds of lepers would fack to it, as a refuge where they could find some relief from the pain they suffer and where they could die in comparative peace. For die they must. There is no known cure for leprosy. That is the pity of it. They are condemned, yet stricken as they are, and hopeless, they have not even a place where they can lay their hands.

where they can lay their heads.

It was back in 1865 when the Hawaiian leper colony was established on the Island of Mohwai. The settlement is located on the north end of the island, a peninsula of 0,000 acres being set apart for the diseased colony. Previous to that year the king of Hawan became alarmed at the conditions which pressible throughout his realm. Able American and European physicians, who were his advisers, warned him that the people were far 100 paysicians, who were his aguisers, wained init that the with the disease. At that time the acquisition of a leptr in a family was not shunned and if one of the members caught the disease there was not shunned and if one of the members caught the disease there was not secure treatment, but the diseased person are and lived just as if there was no disease. Of course conditions were shielded from the Joseph Damien was born in 1840 and he entered the priesthood in his nineteenth year. Long before he had completed his education as a priest he received a call to take up work in the teliands in the Pacific. Up to that time only temporary spiritual aid had been administered to the lepers on Molokal, but upon hearing the bishop lament the fact that he could not send a man away to die among the discased coloniats. Futher Damien offered his services without a moment's hesitation, and took up the work which brought an end to his life. For 12 years he escaped the dread disease, but finally he fell under the shadow of it, and even when begged to leave the Island in order that his life might be prolonged he refused, but stayed on the island and passed away there.

An owledge.

Another and more recent instance of martyrdom exacted for the hopeless cause of the diseased race is that of Sister Marcella of St. Joseph's hospital, Philadelphia, who recently left incrative employment to devote the remainder of her life to the care of lepers at the New Orleans colony.

Joseph's hospital, Philadelphis, who recently left incrative employment to devote the remainder of her life to the care of lepers at the New Orleans colony.

There are now 66 lepers in the place, who are attended by six sisters of charity, whose mother house is at Emmitsburg. Md. and by Rev. A V. Keenan, the chapian. Recently one of the sisters was taken III. Another was needed and Sixter Marcella offered her service.

Interesting experiments have been made among the lepers in the colony and five have been greatly benefited and, in fact, it is believed have been cured of this supposed incurable disease.

Among these is a woman of Kentucky, who a few years ago was prominent in Louisville and the blue grass region. Many years ago this woman's husband, a man of large means and a merchant, committed suicide by shooting. The reason for his suicide, which occurred in Frankfort, was never known says to a few friends. It was learned later, however, that he had been told by physicians in Indianapolila he had leproay.

The reason for his suicide was never told to the wife and daughters. They were well supplied with money. A few years later, when the daughters had grown into womanhood and attained a prominent place in the social life of Kentucky, the mother developed what was thought to be an eczema on the hands and ingers. She was treated by the best doctors in the state, but without result. Then it was developed she had leproay.
