Though the Ann Arbor bank and county officials had decided to allow the family of William Nimks, the 16 year-old boy who confessed to the forgery of $160, to pay the costs and make restitution and diamiss the case, they decided differently afterwards, and the lad was bound over to the October term of the circuit coart. Ball was fixed at $560, which was furnished, and he was allowed to return to his bome.

It has all along been thought the lad had accomplices, because he seemed unable to account for more than $40. An expert decided that the check drawn on the Ann Arbor Savings bank for $61 was written by two different people and at two different itimes, as the amount was filled in in another handwriting and with other shade of ink.
