CONCRETE FOR ROADS

This Material Cheapest in End Says Good Roads Worker—Building Time Is at Hand.

George H. Van Pelt, a member of various good roads associations and an indefatigable worker for better highways throughout Michigan, was asked by President P. L. Cosgrove of the Michigan Good Roads Association to tell at a meeting of the association at the state fair last week what kind of a road he would build. "Well, that's easy," said Mr. Van Pelt. "Anybody could answer that for me. There's only one real road and that's the concrete road. But I'd like to tell how I'd build it. That is a different question. There is too much effort to save money on first cost when we are building roads. It is the final cost for 20 or 50 years of service that counts. It means that we have got to combine the best brains, the best experience and the best materials into our road building—that's all. With that in mind I would engage the very best practical engineer that I could, regardless of salary. I'd make him understand that it was the best concrete road possible to build that I had in mind. I'd have him draw specifications and plans based on the experience of all builders of concrete roads which have proven satisfactory. I'd have him design it strong enough to stand the increased heavy tonnage that is sure to follow and I'd give him instructions to stamp his name and date upon every mile of road he built. A man is mighty careful about his reputation and if he signs his work he's going to build something that will be a credit to him.

"If I were building enough road, I'd expect this engineer to build his organization from the best men obtainable, to establish a laboratory to test out all the materials to be used, to buy the best concrete mixer and to put a man with a conscience to running it so that every batch of concrete would be properly proportioned. If it was best to let the work to a contractor, I would make the requirements so rigid that only experienced contractors would want the work. I would demand daily reports from every department so that my engineer and I would know what was going on.

"Maybe this wouldn't build a road at least cost but we don't want low cost roads. They are only a hindrance to all war traffic today. We cannot afford to build any more of them. I would widen or 'moon' out the curves in order to prevent accidents so that the actual width of the pavement at the center of the curb would be 24 feet for an 18-foot pavement. I would super-elevate the outside of those curves to make steering easier and to prevent skidding. Such curves would be safe at all speeds.

"That's how I would build a concrete road and it costs only a little more than a shoddy road, many of which our war trucks have torn and shot to pieces. But no war truck, I don't care how heavy, has torn up the good concrete roads, the honest concrete roads that are being built traffic and eight inches at the sides is insurance against later trouble. "Concrete roads would be 10 years ahead of where they are today if the first concrete roads had been built with the same knowledge and engineering skill that we have today. We didn't use enough cement. We didn't know the importance of hard, clean materials and proper workmanship. We do know how today, but some of us think too much in terms of first cost and not enough in terms of ultimate cost. We try to skin through on the least expenditure and of course that means trouble.

"I can see the day coming when main traveled roads will be built of concrete from 40 to 60 feet wide with a curb in the middle, built for heavy trucks on one side and touring cars on the other. The need for such roads is already here. But the roads are yet to be built. We can make them beautiful. We want shade trees and fruit trees on both sides. That will keep some of the two hundred million dollars that Americans were spending abroad up to 1914.

A TRUE AMERICAN

Foreign Born Citizen Should Love America Most, Says Prof. Laird Of Ypsilanti.

In an address, Sunday evening, before a large audience at the Army "Y" tent on the university campus, Prof. S. B. Laird of the State Normal, though not a native born American, but a citizen of the United States by adoption, said that he loves this country above every other country in the world for what it has done for him and what it is doing for millions of other men and women from over the seas, and he declared that of all the people who are in America, those who came from over the sea, or whose fathers came from over the sea, owe a greater loyalty to the stars and stripes than the

Up to the present time, according to Secretary Faunce, approximately 200 young men and women have signified their intention of entering the agricultural college with the freshmen class. This is about the same number of applications as were on hand at this time a year ago. It is noticeable among the young men, however, that the thing which is attracting them is the Student Army Training Corps, in which every male student will enroll, and receive the preliminary military training, under Major P. G. Wrightson.

ADVANCES IN ARMY
Alvin Clark Now Chauffeur in Coast Artillery Corps—About Ready To Go Overseas.
Camp Eustis, Virginia, Sept. 7, 1918.
Dear friends: As it is Saturday afternoon and a day of rest from the duties we have in the army except to stand an inspection in the morning, I have some time for myself. I left the other boys I was with on June 26th and was shipped to Camp Eustis and was here five days when I was sent to Fort Monroe to take the chauffeur's course and was there five weeks when I completed it and received my card as a licensed driver for the U. S. army in the C. A. C. I was then sent back to the regiment and took up drill with them which will continue for about a month and I will be assigned to a machine and in a short time will be on our way to go the Huns. This is the only coast artillery camp in the United States and is going to be a great place. It has at present a great number of men in it and they are coming in every day. This morning I was down to the station and saw about 2,000 unloads and get in the barracks. There are five regiments here, but the 50th was the first and will probably move from here first. Last week we had gas mask drill and Saturday we took the test of gas and were kept in gas for awhile and then allowed to loosen the mask to see what it was like; then we were put in the dead chlorine gas, which is very strong and most deadly.

USE FERTILIZER NOW
M. A. C. by Tests Finds Cost of This Necessity Is Less Than Before The War.
Notwithstanding a popular belief held by many farmers that it is unprofitable to use fertilizers under existing conditions, the soils department of the agricultural college has learned from a number of experiments conducted in various parts of the state that it is more economical to use fertilizers now than it was in 1914. This is true, the results show, because the increased yields of wheat and other crops sell for more than they did four years ago.
One of the demonstrations by the department was conducted this season on the county farm in Cass county. An acre without fertilizer yielded only 12.82 bushels of rye, worth $19.23. Another acre to which had been applied three tons of limestone, 200 pounds of acid phosphate and 100 pounds of nitrate of soda yielded 20.96 bushels of rye, worth $31.44. The fertilizer cost $8.10. Because of its place in the rotation, the rye was charged with only one-third of the cost of the fertilizer. The net gain to the farmer, over and above the cost of the fertilizer, $4.11 per acre.
In figuring out the comparative prices of grain and fertilizers, the department found that in 1914 it cost 2.21 bushels of rye to buy enough acid phosphate for one acre, while in 1918, 1.7 bushels of rye will buy the same amount of fertilizer. With wheat, 1.2 bushels will purchase enough acid phosphate for an acre now, while in 1914, 1.7 bushels were necessary.
Farmers seeking knowledge of the amounts and best methods for applying fertilizer can secure it, it is announced, if they write to the department of soils, Michigan agricultural college, or communicate with their local county agricultural agent.

BRINGS IN CAPTIVES
Son of Former Manchester Boy Says Huns Give Slim Excuse for Bombing Hospitals.
Elmer Stark, eldest son of Frank Stark, a former Manchester boy, now in business in Brooklyn, writes his parents from "somewhere in France," from which letter his grandmother, Mrs. Phoebe Stark, has allowed The Enterprise to make the following extracts:
"Suppose you are very much interested in the great success our troops have been having lately; it seems as if the worm has turned again and we have the Hun on the run. Let's hope they continue the good work and get this job over as soon as possible, although it looks now as if it was just beginning."
"During an air raid over our hospital last week our gunners brought down three enemy machines and I had the pleasure of bringing in four Boche aviators in one of our machines. Two died soon after, but the others will get well—unfortunately. But don't think they will ever bomb any more hospitals. When questioned about attacking buildings plainly marked with the Red Cross on the roof they said they were not entitled to that protection when located so near as one and a half miles from a railroad. From this you can get an idea what we are up against, but I hope there will be a day of reckoning when that whole gang of assassins get all that is coming to them."
