Three things combined to save a boy last week: slow driving, watching ahead and absolute control. Absence of either of the three would have meant at least serious injury as the boy dodged from behind a parked car and without looking ran across the street in front of a moving auto. Fortunately the driver was moving slowly, looking ahead, and stopped the car instantly and no one was hurt. All should look carefully before stepping into the street and drivers should watch where they drive every instant and not rubber as some do everywhere but where they are driving.

The Homecoming

Everything indicates the best Homecoming ever August 21 and 22. Committees are rushed to the limit getting everything into line. Congressman Ketchum will give the address, which assures us that this will be well worth hearing.

Many have already spoken for space for exhibits and all are urged to report to Frank VanVoorhees anything they plan for this. The prizes may not pay you for your trouble but the satisfaction of having helped boost your Homecoming will more than repay you. Every visitor said the last year's display was a little the finest they ever saw. Help beat it this year.

Free attractions and carnival features will not be lacking and the ball games will be worth the money. Plenty of good music by the band.

The articles given away will be worth while the first one alone will be worth $25 and the others will aggregate $25 more. The tickets cost you nothing and merchants who have them are glad to give them with 50 cent cash purchases. Don't forget to ask for them.

Remember, the Homecoming will be bigger and better than last year if effort and expense will make it so. If you had a good time last year plan to come again and tell all your friends.

The Chamber of Commerce spent $1000 last year to help people enjoy themselves in Gobles and those who came we think had their money's worth and $1000 will be spent again this year for another good time.

The presents will be displayed soon, the box for your tickets will be in front of News office. Write your name on blue tickets and drop in box and hope for the best. You can't lose as tickets cost nothing.

Programs for 2 full days will be out so on.

Obituary

Lewis Eugene Churchill, son of Levi and Margaret Churchill was born January 27, 1856 at Townsend, Canada and died July 15, 1925.

He came to Michigan when about 2 years of age and spent his early childhood in Cass county and later came to Gobles where he was married Aug. 7, 1875 to Rose H. Houghton, who died Feb. 24, 1903. To them one daughter, Grace, now Mrs. Emmett Thomas of Milwaukee, was born.

March 18, 1908 he married Miss Maude Little of Traverse City and to them one daughter, Cleone was born.

The wife, two daughters, one grandson and one sister are left to mourn his loss.

Mr. Churchill has been associated with the business interests of the town for over 50 years, for 19 of them as postmaster and later selling automobiles.

About two years ago he sold his business and since then he has been enjoying the fruits of his labors.

His genial disposition won him a host of friends who will miss him greatly.

The funeral was held from the home and the large attendance and profusion of flowers were a fitting proof of his popularity. The Eastern Stars and Masonic lodge were in attendance the latter taking charge of the services at the grave.

School Reunion

The Gobles school reunion, an annual event, was held last Saturday on the lawn between the homes of Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Green and Mr. and Mrs. Bert Woodhouse. Mrs. Green and Mrs. Woodhouse as hostesses, had spared no pains to make the occasion a most happy one and the results were very gratifying. The decorations were carried out in yellow and white and consisted of the word "Welcome" which had been suspended between the two homes; crepe paper streamers and bows, with bouquets of yellow and white wild flowers on the tables. Soon after noon the guests began to assemble until 138 had gathered and the afternoon was spent in visiting and exchanging reminiscences. Four different states were represented and some of those present had not met for thirty years. At 5:30 supper was served, every bit of which was delicious; but special mention should be made of a wonderful combination angel food and sunshine cake which Mrs. Rolla Chamberlain brought all the way from McHenry, Ill.; a beautifully decorated "Reunion" cake, at least two feet in length, the gift of Mrs. Green and Guy Thayer's delicious cherry ice cream. After supper E. A. Aseltine said a few appropriate words, Miss Gladys DeYoe wearing her mother's high school graduation dress, gave an original poem concerning the same and Miss Cleve Woodhouse gave a clever reading, Charles Kingsley and Harry Herron, both of Kalamazoo were retained as president and secretary, respectively and the reunion next year will be held at Milham Park.

A vote of thanks was extended to the Green and Woodhouse families whose untiring efforts had contributed so largely toward making the affair the delightful occasion it was.

We wish to thank the friends and neighbors for their kindly assistance during the illness and death of our beloved brother, Will. For the beautiful flowers and Rev. Williams for his comforting words.

DAIRY

"SWAT THE FLY" TO PREVENT DISEASE

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Flies are one of the worst enemies of man. They breed prolifically and prosper in filth. Their conformation is admirably suited for carrying death-dealing organisms from questionable places which they frequent, to the dwelling places, food utensils, and food of man, says the bureau of dairying, United States Department of Agriculture. Flies are a nuisance and anyone who fights them is doing humanity a service.

The female fly is not fastidious about the place in which her offspring are to be born. A manure pile represents the height of her ambition in this respect, and when she has the opportunity she deposits her eggs there in masses. The manure pile reciprocates as an incubator for her young, and in a few days the maggots which hatch from her eggs have developed into full-fledged flies, all ready to start on a campaign of destruction and perhaps death.

The fly is covered with a hairy growth and its feet resemble hairy pads. It probably carries as much filth and as many bacteria on its body, for its size, as anything which lives. No wonder then, considering this point alone, that the fly is an enemy of milk. But this is not all, for the fly is a creature of filthy practices. It sucks its food without fear or favor and then regurgitates it at will. A smooth-surfaced milk utensil may be a handy place for this procedure.

The fly scatters its excreta promiscuously. Its specks may be found on any place it frequents. They look unsightly, but are even worse than they look, because they often contain organisms which are decidedly detrimental to health. Is it any wonder that we are besought and urged to "swat the fly"?

No one is more alive to the danger from flies than the milk inspector. His training and his ambition both call for the destruction of this enemy of clean, safe milk. But sometimes he forgets that not all of the producers are familiar with the characteristics and habits of the fly. He thus overlooks an opportunity. He should explain to his dairymen and also to the people who consume the milk why there should be adequate protection from flies. When a full explanation is made to the dairymen about the fly and its habits, he becomes interested in getting rid of manure piles, trash, and other breeding places, and in trapping and poisoning the flies which appear.

Clean Milk Production Brings Back the Money

That season of the year is here when milk is too often returned to the shipper because it is unfit for consumption or has arrived in a sour condition. Flavors and odors in milk result from four causes and it would be well for the milk producer to note these causes and guard against shipping milk which cannot be used, thereby saving a big loss to his business this summer.

These causes are as follows:

1. Internal or physical condition of the cow.
2. Flavors and odors absorbed within the body of the cow from highly flavored feeds such as turnips, onions, etc.
3. Odors absorbed into the milk after production.
4. Bacterial development within the milk while standing.

Control of these four factors this summer will mean dollars and cents in the milk producer's pocket. These things are also very important for the cream producer to consider, as high-quality butter cannot be made from low-quality cream, and if the butter-maker cannot make superior butter demanding a higher price, he cannot possibly give the producer any more for his product.—H. R. Lascelles, field man, Colorado State Dairy Commission.

Dairy Hints

Crossing dairy breeds is like mixing good ink with good water; the value of each is lost.

Baby calves respond with great susceptibility to care especially during the first few days of their lives.

The most profitable method of handling dairy cows by the average farmer is to market cream and use the skim milk for bringing up calves and pigs.

It is usually a good rule not to feed milk to exceed one-eighth of the calf's weight, at birth, for the first six weeks.

The four generally recognized leading breeds—Ayrshire, Holstein, Guernsey and Jersey—comprise 80 per cent of all registered dairy cattle in the country.

After taking the calf from the cow it should be fed its mother's milk at body temperature, (approximately 103 degrees Fahrenheit) at least three times daily and preferably four.

Shape of Egg Is No Index to Sex

Poultry Breeder Must Rely Solely on Mother Nature for Square Deal.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

If you are one of the many who believe that the long, slim, heavy hen eggs are the ones which hatch out the male chicks, and that the smaller eggs are the ones which give birth to the future layers of the flock, you need to revise your opinion on the matter, says the United States Department of Agriculture. You may as well leave your tape measure, scales, calipers, and other units at home when you go forth to purchase a "setting of eggs" from your poultry breeder, and rely solely on Mother Nature to give you a fifty-fifty deal in the matter of sex.

Can't Determine Sex.

In answer to the continuous stream of inquiries pouring into the department office relative to determining the sex of the chick in the shell by the size, shape, or weight of the egg, the department says "it just isn't being done." That is, not in a practical way, at least. The scientist is able to identify the sex of a chick in the shell after seven or eight days of incubation, however.

Because of the important bearing on the practical aspects of the poultry industry which the ability to select hatching eggs according to the sex desired would have, if such were possible, a number of investigators have made studies concerning the sex-ratio situation in the domestic fowl. Recently Dr. M. A. Jull, poultry husbandman of the United States Department of Agriculture, completed some observations in which he concludes that there is no correlation between the length, shape, or weight of the egg and the sex of the chick hatched from it. He has also made studies to determine whether or not there is a correlation between the weight of the egg yolk and the sex of the chick, or between the yolk water-content and sex ratio, with the same negative result.

Number of Eggs Counts.

It has been determined, however, says Doctor Jull, that the greater the number of eggs which a hen lays before being put into the breeding pen, the larger will be the proportion of females and the smaller the proportion of males produced by her eggs. The practical poultryman may be able to take advantage of this fact to some extent by making his selection of eggs for hatching with reference to the hen's period of production.

Grain for Mature Bull Depends Upon His Size

The grain a mature bull should be fed depends, of course, upon his size and the amount of work he is doing. If he is getting around 12 or 15 pounds of good clover or alfalfa hay and some silage, grain may not be necessary. Many men prefer to feed some grain and either eliminate the silage or feed it in small amounts.

There is some question as to the advisability of silage in a bull's ration. Fed in amounts not in excess of 15 pounds for a large animal, there is very little danger of his becoming too paunchy for service. On the other hand, there is no particular reason why a bull should receive silage if his other feeds are right.

The amount of grain allowed must vary with conditions and service. Usually from four to eight pounds is fed. A good mixture of corn meal, three parts; ground oats, three parts; wheat bran, three parts, and oilmeal, one part. A reasonably accurate guide is to feed a bull the same as a cow in full milk.

Commercial Fertilizer Encourages Big Yields

The continued use of commercial fertilizer over a series of years will encourage the production of large yields and it may be at the end of such a period it will be found impossible to raise as good a crop without the use of fertilizer. However, this is not due to any injurious effect of the fertilizer itself, but rather to the fact that the fertilizer has stimulated the crop, and caused it to remove from the soil even more plant-food elements than are supplied by the fertilizer. But if either large or small amounts of fertilizer are used in connection with a good system of cropping, and every care is taken to return all the manure to the land, there will be no reduction of yield due to soil depletion. The fact is, commercial fertilizers have a very definite value, more especially when proper use depends on such factors as crops, soils, rotation systems, etc.

Sweet Clover Cause of Serious Cattle Trouble

The Minnesota experiment station has discovered that when sweet clover hay is fed in large quantities to cattle, it occasionally causes serious trouble. In fact, when two yearling heifers were fed on an exclusive diet of sweet clover hay both of them died in a little over a month. Death appeared to be caused by internal bleeding. It seems, however, when sweet clover hay is fed in connection with other roughages, that it is safe. Sweet clover pasture seems to be perfectly safe, except for occasional bloating of the same sort that bothers with clover and alfalfa.

Soy Beans Furnish Protein for Stock

Are Superior to Cottonseed Cake for Dairy Cattle.

The past few years has seen a marked increase in the acreage and interest in the growing of soy beans. A national association of growers of soy beans has been organized and they are very actively engaged in popularizing the soy bean in the United States.

The seed of the soy bean plant is the richest in crude protein of all the seeds used in live stock feeding. The percentages of crude protein in soy beans is 38.5 per cent and every 100 pounds of soy beans fed yields 33.2 pounds of digestible crude protein. The soy bean seed is also rich in oil, as it contains 16.1 pounds of digestible fat in each 100 pounds of soy beans fed. Compared to linseed oil meal, soy beans contain 2.9 per cent more digestible crude protein and 9.4 per cent more digestible fat.

Soy beans for dairy cattle are slightly superior to cottonseed cake. Care must be exercised in feeding soy beans to dairy cattle, as excessive amounts cause soft butter.

Cattle have been successfully fattened upon soy beans, and, when compared to cottonseed cake, the soy beans proved just slightly inferior to the cottonseed cake.

In swine feeding, the composition of soy beans, as given above, should be carefully considered. The protein content indicates that it can be used as a protein supplement to carbonaceous grains. Due to its high oil content, soft pork is apt to result, if soy beans are fed to any great extent.

Soy beans should be ground for horses and cattle, but it is not necessary in feeding sheep and pigs.—B. W. Fairbanks, Extension Service, Colorado Agricultural College.

Foreign Clover Seed Is Found to Be Worthless

During the last five years approximately twelve and one-quarter million pounds of Italian red clover seed has entered the United States from Italian ports. This seed is classed by the United States Department of Agriculture and the state experiment stations which have thoroughly tested it as "no good." It is not adapted to the production of clover in this country.

Reports coming from experiment stations in Iowa, Minnesota, Wisconsin, Michigan, Indiana, Ohio, Tennessee, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia, New York and several other states, present a body of information which leads to several important conclusions. These are that Italian red clover seed is worthless except in Idaho and Washington, where the climate is mild; that Bohemian red clover is not much better, and that native American clover seed is the best of all to withstand the winter weather and the attacks of mildew and anthracnose.

Strain of Early Tomato Propagated at Michigan

A new strain of early tomato is being propagated at Michigan State college under the direction of George E. Starr, assistant professor of horticulture.

"The experiment," says Mr. Starr, "is being carried out with the intention of producing a tomato that the Michigan gardener can get on to the market in time to get the benefit of the high prices that prevail a week to ten days before the usual crop is ready for sale. The experiment includes selecting and breeding primarily for earliness. However, size, color and quality have not been neglected and a choice, attractive, as well as early fruit is expected to result. Mr. Starr is at present experimenting on a seedless tomato.

Farm Hints

How about that new alfalfa seed you were planning to put in?

Some say dust potatoes, and some say spray, but either is better than neither.

To pour feed into a dairy cow of unknown productive ability is like sinking money into wildcat oil stocks.

Early plowing is best for wheat. The seedbed should be fairly deep, with a loose surface, but well firmed.

Most farmers think late afternoon is the best time to cut alfalfa. The hay is apt to look better for it, and more of the leaves will stay on.

The use of improved machinery makes the average agricultural worker able to care for three times as many acres of crops as he could handle 75 years ago.

A substantially made well curb and platform help to keep the drinking supply pure and uncontaminated. Use a 1-2-3 mixture—one part cement, two parts sand and three parts pebbles or crushed rock.

Short pastures now will be shorter next season if nothing's done to improve them. Manure is one of the best helps for run-down grass; ten or fifteen loads to the acre will be noticed next summer.

POULTRY

PLACING INCUBATOR EGGS ON THE MARKET

(By T. E. QUISENBERRY)

Some farmers and poultry raisers make a practice of putting eggs on the market which they have had in an incubator for a few days and found the eggs to be infertile. This is a bad practice and should never be done by any honest farmer or poultry raiser. You may make good use of such eggs by consuming them at home. They will do to fry, for baking and for certain kinds of cooking, but they are absolutely unfit for the market. Such eggs, while good for home consumption are absolutely unfit for shipping. The yolks will break, the eggs will rot before they can reach the consumer, and it is a dishonest practice to offer such eggs for sale as fresh-laid eggs, and you lower the price on all eggs by so doing. Consume such eggs at home.

We have seen severe market losses due to a habit of sending infertile incubator eggs into commerce. This has been especially noticeable in the large houses making a specialty of breaking out eggs where they found it absolutely necessary to candle even in March and early April because farmers and poultry raisers were marketing infertile incubator eggs with their fresh eggs, and the incubator eggs came in in such bad condition and were so numerous that they had to be culled out before it was safe for the breakers to handle the eggs. At that time of the year there is no other reason for candling. You can see what a loss this means to any dealer, and instead of reducing the army of candlers which are now required this practice makes a demand for even a greater number.

Another very serious evil due to the marketing of infertile eggs from an incubator or from underneath a hen is their admixture with storage stock. These incubator eggs usually go on the market at the season when eggs are being stored without being candled. We know it to be a fact that infertile incubator eggs break down during transportation and handling and easily become "white rots."

Infertile incubator eggs can be used for bakers' purposes in the home, but under no circumstances should they ever be offered for sale or for shipment.

Another important reason why such eggs should not be marketed as fresh eggs is the fact that they are liable to be seized by food inspectors as being misbranded. Such eggs play havoc with the storage stock, and we are in hopes that no farmer or poultry raiser will be guilty of such a dishonest practice.

Trap Nest Is Accurate Test of Hen's Ability

The trap nest is the most accurate test of a hen's ability to lay eggs, but it is not practicable for those who live on farms, with all the other work they must do. Therefore, poultry specialists have been studying the general characteristics of laying hens, so that we might have a set of almost exact rules for telling the layers from the loafers. It has been proven over and over that these rules work correctly and no farm woman need longer feed hens that will not pay for their feed bill and give a profit. We must also remember that these lazy hens, which have been loafing all summer, fall and winter, will be laying their few eggs next spring at hatching time, and if their eggs are set, we will have another flock of loafers.

The hens that begin to molt in July should be sent to market. There is one exception to this, the hen that has hatched and brooded a flock of chicks, for she will usually go through a partial molt before she begins laying again. August 15 and September 15 is the best time to cull, but it will pay to go over your flock from time to time through the summer and cull out. Sell those that have stopped laying. There are usually a number of hens in every flock whose general appearance indicates they have low vitality, little vigor and will never be profitable egg producers. A great percentage of these low vitality birds are late hatched pullets of the previous season.

Poultry Hints

Carrots, cabbage and sprouted oats help make strong chicks.

Good hatches are obtained only when the laying stock has been selected for vigor and made to exercise.

Fresh eggs are the best for hatching purposes. If it is regarded necessary to keep hatching eggs they should be stored in a temperature of 60 degrees or lower.

Cull all undeveloped pullets and old hens from the flock.

Early hatched pullets will molt early in the fall and be ready for laying next winter at a season when egg production is low and prices high.

It has been shown that young chicks are most susceptible to infestation of roundworms until about 12 weeks of age. With severe infestation death may occur in two weeks. In mild infestations chicks live, but growth is slower and resistance to disease less.

Possibly Had in Mind King George's Levees

An English visitor at the North shore was invited to drop in at White Court by a friend to see President Coolidge. Naturally, he was delighted over the honor.

"Are you spoofing?" he asked his host.

"Not at all," replied the latter. "Do you mean that I may shake hands and converse with the President of the United States?"

"Yes," he was informed, "and you will have to do most of the talking." Just before leaving for White Court the Englishman called up his American friend. "I say, old top," said he, "shall I have to put on a morning suit to see your President?" "No," he was told, "this is a republic. Come in your bathing suit if you have no other."—Washington Star.

Set of Teeth

The word "set" in this relation is a general term and may correctly be applied either to all the teeth or to only part of them. For instance, it is correct to say, he has a good set of upper teeth or a good set of lower teeth. On the other hand, it is also correct to say, he has a good set of teeth, meaning both the upper and lower teeth taken together. If no modifying word such as "upper" or "lower" is used "set of teeth" is understood to include both.—Pathfinder Magazine.

Few people realize the wide extent of the Mohammedan world as it exists today. It covers a territory three times as large as that of the United States, extending from Western Siberia southward into India and westward across Africa to the Atlantic.

Michigan Happenings

Distribution of the primary school fund for the present year will be made on the basis of $13.70 per child, Thomas E. Johnson, superintendent of public instruction, announced. This is 30 cents a child less than last year, due principally to the abnormal increase in the number of school children in Michigan last year. The recent school census shows the increase to be approximately 50,000, or double the increase of recent years. The number of school children in the state is 1,124,000. The primary school fund totals $15,440,000.

Secretary of State Charles J. DeLand acted to put into force regulations aimed to eliminate fraudulent dealings by building and loan associations. The new regulations were drawn following an examination of the books of some 40 associations, many of which were found to be violating the law passed by the 1925 legislature. The rules place the building and loan salesmen exactly in the class of the stock salesmen, in that he must be registered and approved by the department before he is permitted to do business.

The State of Michigan faces a deficit of at least $1,100,000, it is revealed in figures given members of the administrative board by Henry Croll Jr., state budget director. The state's books for the fiscal year, which ended June 30 this year, will show when the accounting is completed a paper surplus of $1,800,000. This paper surplus, however, is obtained on the basis of considering as assets large sums owed the general fund by the prison fund and the state highway department.

A suit to prohibit the City of Detroit from collecting more than $23,000 assessed against the State Fair property in connection with the widening and improving of Woodward avenue, has been started in the Ingham County Circuit Court by Victor H. Spike, assistant Attorney-General. The State contends that the Fair Ground property is used for public educational and welfare purposes and is exempt from participation in the cost of improvement.

Announcement was made at the Y. M. C. A. at Lansing that the camp for underprivileged boys of the city, financed by the Rotary club and conducted under direction of the Y. M. C. A., will be held at the Boy Scout camp at Clear Lake, near Jackson, from August 15 to 22. About 65 boys recruited from the social service center, the underprivileged "Y" boys club, and by members of the Rotary club, are to go to the camp.

A reorganization of personnel and the institution of a policy of rigid economy by the State Department of Public Safety was announced at Mt. Clemens by Alan G. Straight, commissioner. The changes involve also the establishment in both the lower and upper peninsulas of State Police troops and a centralized operations office in Lansing, comprising a system not unlike that employed by the army.

The assessment of property in Michigan will be boosted half a billion dollars this year according to preliminary figures compiled by George Lord, head of the state tax department. The assessment will be completed by August 3 for service on the municipalities. The board of equalization will meet August 17 to hear protests and comments from the various counties.

Indications that the merchant's bureau of the chamber of commerce does not intend to drop its fight against projecting signs on the principal streets of Lansing, despite the protests of several merchants, were given when Charles G. Mackichan, president of the bureau, announced the appointment of a committee to plan for the removal of the signs.

After a discussion between the city manager and the city commission of Pontiac, a decision was reached to abandon the plan to widen East Huron street. The heavy cost of property in this district made it inadvisable to proceed with the work, despite the fact that the street is in the downtown section and carries heavy traffic.

Believing that many fish were killed by a quantity of acid dumped into the Kalamazoo river at the plant of the Albion Bolt company, Deputy Game Warden Daniel O'Leary of Marshall, analyzed samples of water from the river above and below the sewer from the plant. Prosecution under the law of pollution of streams is expected.

In an effort to stimulate patronage and increase revenues, the Detroit United Railway will not take advantage of the 3-cents-a-mile fare rate granted recently by the State Utilities Commission, as far as the Flint division is concerned, but instead a reduction is planned.

Grand Rapids has a population of 163,812, according to estimates based on the new school census just completed. Children of school age total 42,203.

The administration committee of the Grand Rapids city commission and city manager, Fred H. Locke, has acted to force the Grand Haven & Muskegon Railway company to so route its passenger and freight cars as to remove them from downtown streets. The Grand Rapids Railway company has petitioned for permission to build track to connect the G. R. G. H. & M., with the Michigan Railroad company's lines to permit of through freight traffic. The committee and manager granted the petition on condition the interurban companies vacate the downtown streets.

Three youthful bandits made away with the $33,000 Lakey Foundry company payroll, of Muskegon, after holding up the three carriers, near the paymaster's office, where a score of employes were waiting for their pay. The carriers were unarmed and did not resist. As the carriers approached with two boxes containing the money, two of the men stepped through the gate into the factory yard and brandished pistols. They loaded the boxes into the automobile and it sped down a side street hidden from view of those who had witnessed the job.

City Attorney John Farley has acted to protect Flint's interest in collection of delinquent taxes in a petition to the circuit court for an injunction restraining stockholders of a defunct automobile sales agency from disposing of the company's holdings pending collection of the taxes. The petition came as the aftermath of a judgment for $4,085 granted the city against the Hurd Auto Sales company, which has since gone out of business. The delinquent taxes are included in the $50,000 personal taxes uncollected.

Five persons were in Nicholas hospital and several others in jail as the result of the race riots at Battle Creek. Long alleges that he was injured badly while attending a carnival in Saginaw when a motorcycle jumped the rim of a motorhome and ran over him. He holds the fair association responsible for not providing proper safeguards.

The announcement of the purchase of the plant and equipment of the Michigan Drop Forge Co. at Pontiac, by the Wilson Foundry & Machine Co. was made by D. R. Wilson, general manager of the Wilson company. The property was surrounded by the Wilson plant and will be used for future expansion Mr. Wilson said.

The Electric Railway Co. at Port Huron, which provides local street car transportation, must provide improved transportation facilities to the city's beaches before a fare increase will be granted, Mayor McMillan announced. The company had asked the city to permit it to charge a higher fare.

Isaac Quigno, 75 years old, former chief of the Pottawatome Indian tribe near Hartford, has been married to Mrs. Lizzie Gibson, of Water-vliet. Quigno for years has been a leader in an attempt to gain settlement of Lake Michigan property at Chicago, which he claims belongs to the Indians.

Northville is to have a new modern movie theater and play house. The Allen-Penniman syndicate, of Plymouth, has purchased the property on Main street left vacant by the recent fire which destroyed the Aly-selum theater and the grocery store of W. H. Elliott.

Police Chief William Kurtz has notified all police patrols operating in Saginaw that they must obey the state motor vehicle laws relative to speeding. This is in response to ordinary calls, emergency calls being allowed the necessary speed to get results.

FOR HOPE-CHEST LINGERIE, THE SEMI-FORMAL TAILOR

SO FAR as lingerie is concerned it appears that all fabrics that are not light, silky and colorful are as far behind the times and as dead as King Tut's wife. Daintiness is so dear to the hearts of women that even gossamer materials, whose chief reason for existence is sheer beauty, find themselves in demand for undergarments.

But it is not likely that they will ever displace the beautiful and more head so cool and level that it is not turned a little by the lure of Paris clothes? If such there be, don't look for her on the big liners as they discharge their more or less expensively clad passengers, returning from Europe. Ladies of great wealth, moving-picture stars and buyers of styles, who can afford to cover themselves with glory, step from the gang planks weekly, clad in the work of world-famed French artists. From them practical silks and silky cottons, that are durable as well as delicate. Nothing is more sturdy than crepe de chine, unless it is fine voile, and this quality makes it worth while to trim garments made of them with fine, wear-resisting laces and to lavish handwork on them. Dainty materials, good laces and handwork—these are the ingredients of confections that glorify and help to fill the hope chest.

Pictured above is a set that will inspire a longing to own one like it, and it is so simply designed that almost any woman can copy it. Pink crepe de chine, filet lace, narrow val edging and hand sewing commend this set as pretty "pick-up work" for the ambitious woman, and the materials are to be found everywhere.

The gown is made with straight skirt shirred to a wide band of filet lace, having triangular insets of hand-run tucks. The fashionable, wide shoulder straps are made of the filet lace, which is edged with narrow val lace. Baby ribbon is run in the band along the top, in case it needs adjust-prophetic details of coming modes may be gathered.

Full many a darling of the gods steps ashore in sports clothes—which seem to pass everywhere—and many another in the semi-formal tailleur—for one is supposed to dress up a bit upon landing, although no one will be criticized who wears a plain, well-tailored suit. When a costume like that sketched above passes by, the camera of the fashion reporter will approvingly click and register some of the high lights of the new mode in tailored suits of the semi-formal type. These and the plain suits are conservative in design, but give a general impression of richness. Fine embroideries, introducing dull gold threads, that give them the appearance of tapestries, point out the path of fashion toward rich effects. Callot uses embroidered triangles on the coat of the handsome suit pictured and shows approval of the high collar and of crepe satin for semi-formal costumes. But crepe-satins and twills are developed in the same way; both are used for tailored suits, and in ing to the figure. The step-in chemise is made in the same way, but has ribbon shoulder straps like the slip; the latter develops a little fullness in the skirt portion. To crown this irreproachable set and make the happiness of its wearer complete, a band of lace, pink ribbon and flowers may be added and quilted pink satin mules for the feet—or others made of ribbon.

HOW TO SOLVE A CROSS-WORD PUZZLE

When the correct letters are placed in the white spaces this puzzle will spell words both vertically and horizontally. The first letter in each word is indicated by a number, which refers to the definition listed below the puzzle. Thus No. 1 under the column headed "horizontal" defines a word which will fill the white spaces up to the first black square to the right, and a number under "vertical" defines a word which will fill the white squares to the next black one below. No letters go in the black spaces. All words used are dictionary words, except proper names. Abbreviations, slang, initials, technical terms and obsolete forms are indicated in the definitions.

THE OTHER MAN'S JOB

By THOMAS ARKLE CLARK

"I SUPPOSE you'll have nothing to do now until September," Smith said to me at commencement time. "Absolutely nothing," I replied, for it is less exhausting to agree with a man like that than it is to try to give him an idea of the endless list of things waiting to be done whenever the days of apparent leisure shall come. He would not understand.

Smith is a retired farmer who lives near me and whose regular work is accomplished when he has fed the chickens and mowed the lawn. Like many another man he is possessed of the imbecile idea that a college instructor during the summer and regular vacations is as free from mental and physical work as a spring lamb, that he has nothing to do but loaf at hilarious pleasure resorts and take life easily generally. When his class is dismissed his work is done.

As a boy I had the same impression myself, especially of bankers. I was, in fact, quite determined to be a banker, for did he not lead a life of ease and luxury until the bank opened at nine in the morning, and was he not free to take his rest and come and go as he pleased after three in the afternoon? Besides this privilege of his having little to do, there was the added attraction of unlimited sums of money at his disposal. I knew, for I had often looked in at the window of Chamberlain's bank when my father was transacting some important business with the cashier.

I had a summer experience a good many years later in a bank which led me somewhat to revise my opinions as to the banking business and caused me to see that even the banker does not always lead a life of complete leisure and luxury. He has often been known to work both before and after the doors of the bank open.

Failing to qualify in the banking business, it always seemed to my youthful judgment that the next best outlook was in the profession of medicine. I drew this conclusion from a careful observation of Doctor Triplett, our family physician, who used to drive "out to our house in a two-wheeled sulky—the roads were frightfully muddy in those days—and who charged two dollars and a half for the trip of four miles and back. It seemed an unconscionable sum to ask for so pleasant a jaunt, when all he did, so far as I could see, was to tell a few jokes, and all he left was a little bottle of sugar pills that would not have filled a teaspoon. His job seemed a good deal like a snap to me. Of course he often had to go farther, and sometimes in the middle of the night, and I've heard that many people never paid him, but I never took those things into consideration then.

It has always been interesting to me that most people are likely to consider the other man's job easier than their own, and not infrequently to express the conviction that if they were holding his job they would do it better than he is doing it.

I listened a few weeks ago to Gall Currier's incomparable singing. The perfection of her art was to me marvelous. Behind me in the auditorium were two men apparently with some amateurish knowledge of music and musical terms.

"There's nothing remarkable about her singing," one of the men remarked. "She just does it naturally."

"There is no reason why anybody should not learn to sing that way, if he would but give himself over to it," the other assented. Before the end of the evening they were both convinced that they could do as well as this woman. Strange it is how confident we are of our ability to handle the other man's job.

Most men advise their sons to avoid the business or the profession which they themselves have followed. If asked why, their invariable reply is, "There is nothing in it but trouble and hard work. I don't want my son to go through what I've gone through."

And so the farmer trains his son to be a merchant, and the physician sends his boy to an engineering school, and the engineer advises his young hopeful to study law, each with the idea that he is making it possible for the boy to get the maximum returns for the minimum expenditure of time and effort, and in the belief that the other man's job is far easier than his own. The real facts are that no job is easy if it is done well. Every business or profession has its exactions, its annoyances, its disagreeable features, its difficulties and its failures. If we think otherwise, it is only because we are unfamiliar with what constitutes the successful doing of the job. There are few snaps in the world; even the teaching profession, if one is to be successful, demands that one have energy, a little brains at least, some training, and a willingness to work at least twelve months in the year. The same thing is true of almost any other job.

What Makes a Hotel Popular?

THE BASIS of popularity of a hotel is satisfying service; and growth comes from the fact that guests not only come back again but also tell others of the good treatment they receive.

Here at the ROWE we endeavor to render service that is unobtrusive but effective in making our guests comfortable. And we know we are giving values that are not usually associated with the exceptionally low room-rate now in effect.

DEBT DISCUSSION BROUGHT TO END

French and British Are Unable to Agree.

Paris.—The French debt funding negotiations with London were broken off after four days of discussion. The British asked the French government to make a temporary agreement for three or four years under which France would pay $5,000,000 ($25,000,000) annually until the French capacity to pay is known, but Joseph Caillaux flatly refused. The breakdown in the negotiations certainly will have some effect on the funding negotiations in Washington, which are based on the London agreement. The negotiations with London may not be resumed until next year.

Nation May Acquire New Warfare Weapon

Washington.—The Navy department has afforded facilities to Dr. Edwin R. Scott of San Francisco for carrying out experiments with an arrangement reported as promising a new method for warfare. The department indicated the experimenting involved the use of ultraviolet rays. Doctor Scott was quoted as saying: "It will set fire to dead trees, burn holes through two inches of steel a mile distant, and there is no doubt at all but that this stroke could be sent in any desired direction for 20 miles."

Sensational Raid on Leading Chicago Hotel

Chicago.—Frank Blair Rodkey, a clerk in the Drake hotel, was killed, two bandits were shot dead, a third was captured, two others escaped, $10,000 was seized, and a throng of bystanders were thrown into panic when a robber crew, masked and bristling with shotguns and pistols, perpetrated an amazing daylight assault on the Drake hotel.

New Canadian Grain Law Now Effective

Montreal, Que.—A proclamation issued in the Canada Gazette brings into force the new Canadian grain act. There are numerous changes in regard to the operation of elevators and in grading and weighing of grain, the government being given power to put all the terminal elevators under one commission.

American Miners Will Stand by Britishers

London.—In reply to an appeal telegraphed to the American mine workers by Frank Hodges, secretary of the British Miners' union, the American miners cabled their promise of solidarity in the threatened strike of British miners and promised to carry out any action which the International federation desired.

Shipping Board Can Sell Vessels to Ford

Washington.—The shipping board was advised by Attorney General Sargent that it has authority to sell 200 vessels for scrapping to Henry Ford as recommended by President Palmer of the Fleet corporation. Mr. Ford has offered $1,706,000 for the lot.

No Truth in Rumor Mellon Will Resign

New York.—Secretary Mellon, spending the summer at Southampton, L. I., announced through his private secretary that there was no truth in the published report that he was contemplating resigning his post in the cabinet.

Greb Knocks Out Bryant

Tulsa, Okla.—Harry Greb of Pitts- burgh, world's middleweight champion, disposed of Otis Bryant of Chicago in the third round of a scheduled ten-round bout here.

Dayton, Ohio.—Members of the Ku Klux Klan of this and surrounding cities held a memorial service and cross-burning for William Jennings Bryan near here. All attending klansmen were robed.

TAX SLASH OF MANY MILLIONS

Congressman Madden Tells of Reductions to Be Made.

Swampscott.—That finances of the government are in condition to permit the next congress to effect a tax slash of at least $350,000,000 was the assurance given the country by Representative Madden of Illinois, chairman of the appropriations committee, following a long conference with President Coolidge.

The program backed by Madden includes: Cutting of maximum surtax to 20 per cent. Abolishing of inheritance and gift taxes. Reduction of all the lower brackets, possibly to as low as 1 per cent on incomes of $5,000.

Abolishing the nuisance taxes, including theater and movie taxes and club dues.

Madden said he has figures showing that the treasury surplus will be at least $373,000,000. If the government's receipts continue to grow, and governmental economy is practiced wherever possible, the tax slash will exceed $350,000,000, he said.

"All the foreign nations can afford to pay their debts," Mr. Madden added, "and we expect them to pay."

"My observations abroad convinced me that England, which is already paying her debt, is in worse shape than any of the other allied nations. Her coal exports have fallen off 75 per cent. She has 1,500,000 people idle. She is buying from France the fabrics she formerly sold to France. And her tax rate is the highest.

"France is busy. Belgium is able to pay and will pay. All the countries could pay without difficulty if they would abolish their wasteful expenditures."

Mr. Madden said the $169,000,000 war debt payment being made to this country annually by England, and the war payments to come from other countries, should be applied to decrease the national debts. He added that the government's surplus from current income each year should be applied to tax reduction.

No Plans Being Made to Seize Coal Mines

Swampscott, Mass.—President Coolidge knows of no plans worked out by the bureau of mines or any other government agency contemplating seizure of anthracite mines in event that operators and miners fail to agree on a wage scale and operations in the hard coal fields are suspended on September 1.

It is the opinion of President Coolidge that there is no authority on the part of the government to seize mines except the extreme authority of protecting the government and the public.

Last of French Troops Leave German Territory

Berlin.—The excavation of the Ruhr by the French was completed. After two years of occupation, the last French soldier left the industrial heart of Germany and the official occupation came to an end. A parade of troops at Essen was the last official act.

When the last tri-color over French headquarters came down, the symbol that French rule was ended, the population went wild with joy.

Thousands of Germans Expelled From Poland

Schneidemuhl, Germany.—Heart-rending scenes were witnessed here in the great camp established to receive the thousands of Germans Poland has ordered to cross her borders back into their homeland, because in the Upper Silesian plebiscite of 1920 they favored retention of the territory by Germany.

It is said that at least 50,000 Germans have been deported.

British Labor Party Loses Fight in House

London.—Unemployment insurance was passed by the house of commons after a Labor motion to reject the bill was defeated by a vote of 263 to 98. The Labor party strongly opposed amendment and declared it would deprive 70,000 unemployed persons of benefits they would otherwise receive.

Agreement Reached in British Coal Crisis

London.—British coal miners called off their general strike. The walkout was averted when Premier Stanley Baldwin promised "subvention" to the mines, thereby enabling the owners to continue their existing wage agreements for another nine months.

Do Fancy Shooting

New York.—Thirteen hits out of one hundred rounds were recorded by the three-inch anti-aircraft guns in the test at Fort Tilden, N. J. Brig. Gen. Johnson Hatgood described the result as excellent.

LABOR TO BE NONPARTISAN

Widespread Activity in Politics Urged by Executive Council.

Washington.—In direct language from its executive council, the American Federation of Labor announced that it was through backing third-party movements of the kind which it supported in 1924, with the late Senator LaFollette as Presidential candidate.

A return to the custom of entering congressional and other political contests in support of individual candidates satisfactory to unions was emphatically indicated as its future course by the council, which has just wound up a quarterly session during which much time was given to study of labor strategy in approaching elections.

The council's decision recited a general resolution adopted by the federation's national convention at El Paso last year, which laid down the principle that organized labor "must be as free from political-party domination now as at any time in its history."

The convention's dictum was carried further by the council's declaration that "no aid or comfort will be given those who seek to launch a third-party movement," and by a decision to have prepared for the national convention at Atlantic City, October 5, a set of reports dealing with local, state and national political contests. These are to carry tentative endorsements for candidates friendly to labor, regardless of their party affiliation.

In behalf of such candidates the council promises to wage a "strenuous nonpartisan political campaign." State federations of labor and central labor bodies everywhere will be summoned to assist, as in previous years, it said, while its usual condemnation of "bosses" and support of the primary system for nominating candidates was again made evident.

Mystery Veils Woman's Death on Illinois Farm

Mattoon, Ill.—Deep, sinister mystery comparable to that which surrounded the killing at Aurora, Ill., of Mrs. Anna Lincoln and her brother, Byron Shoup, hangs over the death of Miss Cora Stallman, forty-eight-year-old university graduate, whose body was found in a cistern on the $250,000 estate of her sister, Mrs. Anna Seaman.

Even the cause of her death is unknown. A post-mortem examination disclosed that there was no water in the lungs and that she had not drowned. With the body was found a series of letters with innuendos and charges of strange complexes on the part of the members of the Seaman household. In one of the missives a demand was made that $200 be left in the mail box. This was not complied with, and one theory is that the woman was killed in revenge.

Spanish Dictator Offers Peace Terms to Rifians

Madrid.—The Spanish dictator, Primo de River, has offered peace terms to Abd-el Krim, it became known here. The dictator is acting for both the Spanish and French governments. Krim sent two envoys from Tangier to the Spanish headquarters to receive the peace terms. Fifty Spanish soldiers were killed or wounded in dislodging rebels between Bulherif and Taurat Amaran, a war office statement announced.

Twelve Spanish casualties in a "police" operation on the western front also are recorded.

United States Marines to Leave Nicaragua

Managua, Nicaragua.—The Nicaraguan government issued a statement to the country saying that the American marines who have been stationed in Nicaragua for more than a decade would depart from the country at once. The statement begs all Nicaraguans to support the government in the preservation of peace and in this manner make Nicaragua deserving of the name of an independent and civilized nation.

President Coolidge's Son Is Corporal in Army

Camp Devens, Mass.—John Coolidge, son of President Coolidge, was made acting corporal of his squad, the second of Company C, Third battalion. When the company went through its first formation at the Citizens' Military training camp, John won the promotion on the strength of his camp experience two summers ago.

Brena Selcoss raised her head from Colby Pennington's desk and stared at Peter's lawyer with an expression of terror in her parted lips, in her eyes, in her white hands, held out as if to ward away a hideous idea.

"You let him go!" she exclaimed in a breaking shaken voice.

"Let him go?" asked the astounded Colby. "Why shouldn't he go? Is there any reason—"

It was evident to Brena that this man had not been in Peter's confidence; he could not know that a call like this had come to the other two men and that Peter might be the third to go. She interrupted him with a gesture of impatience, saying, "He left no word—no address—nothing with which to trace him?"

"Not with me."

Leaning forward he pressed a pearl button on his desk, then seized a cigar, nipped the end off with his large white teeth, looked again at Brena, lovely in spite of her grief and terror, and threw it back into the box. Usually Pennington was the master of any meeting with a stranger, but now something of that immortal personality which was hers, something in her bearing, something in her eyes, something in that calm of distant mountains that she had regained, held Colby silent until the door of his office opened and the chief clerk stepped in from the cork composition flooring outside onto the noiseless padded green carpeting inside.

"Fred!"

"Yes, sir."

"Did Mr. DeWolfe say where he was going—did he leave any word with us?"

"Yes, sir."

"What?"

"Why, if I'm not mistaken, Mr. Pennington, he said that he was going to New Orleans, Fort Worth, and a place called Kremlin Wells, Texas. He was to be there—Excuse me."

The chief clerk picked up from the desk the bronze-framed calendar and moved his pencil on it. He said, "He was to be there on the 24th, but gave no address there. The twenty-fourth is four days from now."

"Kremlin Wells, Texas? I never heard of such a place," said Pennington, scowling after the manner of one who dislikes any fact not within the swing of his own radius.

"Nor had I. I looked it up. Not in the geography. But it's in the railroad guide—a way station, probably with a water tank, on the Texas Central and New Mexico—on the desert near the border between the two states, Mr. Pennington. That was all that he said. He left some papers to put in our safe and asked me to open them and attend to them if he was not back in three weeks."

"Thank you," said Pennington. "That's all, Fred."

"Wait!"

Brena had spoken in a low tone, but with that authority sometimes heard in her voice.

"You Let Him Go?" She Exclaimed in a Breaking, Shaken Voice.

The chief clerk stopped as if her word had been a bullet in his lungs. "Will you help me?" she said to Peter's lawyer. "I assure you that he would wish it."

Colby looked at her as one would look at a new model of some automobile; at last he nodded.

"I want to know the first train leaving New York for St. Louis and Texas," she said. "I want some one to go for a ticket and reservations to Kremlin Wells or the nearest point. I want a taxicab. I want you to do everything in your power to get me to Kremlin Wells before the twenty-fourth. It must be done!"

Pennington stared at her.

"Very unusual," he muttered. "But I said we'd do it, Miss Selcoss."

Partly because of the assistance of his office force, Brena was on her way to St. Louis, without even hand baggage, but within an hour; partly because of it she was on a train that rolled into Dallas through the railroad yards with the shabby wooden settlements, seen again from her berth through the slit of window beneath the curtain as she raised her weight on one elbow. It had not changed completely since she had seen it on her return after Jim Hennepin had disappeared. This morning began the 23d of the month; she had the sense of racing to Kremlin Wells in a contest with death.

At the final junction point of her long journey, tired, nerve-racked by unremitting heat of night and day and by the strain of suspense, she found it necessary to wait under a train shed, where in the waiting-room or on the platform the mid-day humidity created a smothering steam filled with the gases belched from locomotive stacks and the ear-smashing explosions from engine exhausts and the impact of car couplers. The train for the West was three hours late. She could not leave the station; she walked back and forth, her weary eyes held open wide by will, her jaw firm. And dogging every step she took was the fear that she would be too late, that when daylight came on the twenty-fourth she would not yet be at her destination.

The conductor on the westbound mall was not of the same mind. Beautiful young women traveling alone do not alight every day in "holes in the desert" as he called the Wells; he considered it less desirable to set her down some time in the dark hour between three and four. He said the place consisted of a siding, a water tank, a general store, five houses, two saloons where roulette wheels were going during the sheep herders' season, an adobe ruin and a hotel with three rooms above a bar.

"I am sure it will be all right," said Brena. "But even if it were not I would have to leave this train here."

At about three the porter woke her. There were ten minutes of dressing, and then she heard the whine of the brakes, and with muddy, sleep-thickened senses, with the ache of stiff bones and muscles and nerves after the heat, the inadequate sleep and the strain, she felt out from the lower step with one foot into the bottomless depths of blackness for the boards of the platform.

When the soft night breeze that flowed in a steady stream from the southwest had blown the haze away as if it were a dust that had settled on her, the train had been swallowed in the dark.

She could hear the splash of water leaking from the bottom of the railroad tank and occasionally the heat lightning on the horizon covered the desert toward the south with the white flare of a photographer's flashlight powder, disclosing the vast expanse broken by black patches of desert vegetation. But her attention was now held by a dim swinging lantern that came toward her out of the black push of the dark, as if it came with volition and movement of its own.

When this light came close to her, she felt an impulse to leap back into the dark as one who is desperate might leap into the depths of black waters; when the light was raised toward her face so that its possessor might see her, she wished that she had fled.

The face on the other side of the light was the essence of brutality—the black pupils in bloodshot eyes, the sun-baked skin drawn taut over immense protruding cheek bones, the thin wrinkled upper lip over a full red drooping under lip, the broad, wide nostrils, the thick gleaming muscular neck of the halfbreed Mexican and Indian.

Brena closed her fingers under cover of the dark and made the pressure of nails in her own palm summon her will to put her face nearer his and to speak before he could speak, so that she might escape from all manner of being on the defensive.

She said in a firm voice, "I came to find some one."

The other grunted incredulously. "He came here within a day or two." The Mexican raised one dark hand and pulled the long lobe of one ear; his expression was crafty. He said, "Maybe so, quien sabe?"

"At the hotel," she suggested.

The man with the lantern raised it again to look at her; he was silent, and then suddenly he grinned.

"Oh, at hotel, eh? Ha! I know heem. Certain. At the hotel. He come by big automobile."

"Peter DeWolfe?"

The other shook his head; he did not know. He said in a soothing, codding voice, "S'all ri', missy. You come, eh?" He beckoned with a finger.

Brena nodded and followed him as he walked on before, the lantern swinging at his knees, the shadows of his dark short bowed legs scissoring on the gravel and the noncommittal dark beyond in every direction squirming and alive with black maggot-gods of fear.

with their little white needles of light. The lantern, however, now threw its light upon a little two-story wooden building within the old walls. This structure was dark below except for the lantern's light flung from the glass; its faint two squares of windows above were black on either side of a doorway reached by narrow rickety wooden stairs built on the exterior of the house.

"Up," commanded the Mexican with his hand on the rail.

Brena hesitated.

"I take you to heem."

She began to climb, gripping the hand-polished rail to steady her nerves by the force of her own arm muscles.

"In! This my house. I keep for Mister Glaub. In!"

She passed by him as he flattened himself against the door jamb.

Four closed doors, unpainted and covered with penciled signatures, dates, arithmetic, and scrawled faces and verses, almost filled the walls of the narrow seven feet of square wall. With a grunt, like a pig's, the Mexican opened one of these doors and plucked at Brena's elbow.

"Look! What I say? This heem?"

The lantern's circle of light rose and widened as he held it higher until it covered a cot on which a waking sleeper was pushing himself up on one arm and reaching under a pillow with the other hand.

"Look! What I Say? This Heem?"

"A lady," the Mexican said, and putting the lantern on the bare boards, he slid out and closed the door.

The man on the cot sprang up, raised the lantern, and at the end of a high exclamation he gasped for another breath and ejaculated, "Brena!"

"Yes, Peter. Thank God, Peter, I came in time."

"Time—time for what? I'm all right, dear. I cabled you to wait."

"I'd started, Peter. I didn't get it."

"They told you in New York?"

"Yes, Peter, they said you'd had a call."

"I didn't say so, dear. I said I had business here."

"I don't care—you forget. You are the third—I couldn't stand it, Peter. It was you—that's different."

"You're tired out." He held the lantern higher again.

"No, I'm not, Peter," she said, with a brisk unconvincing lie. "I want you to be glad I came."

He dropped the lantern; it went out. He put his arms around her and bent her head close to his shoulder as he patted her hair with the open palm of his hand. He said, "Glad? Me? Glad? Brena! I can't say it, dear. The cup runs over at the brim!"

"I've been in mortal fear, Peter," she whispered and shivered in his arms. "I thought I had sent you away to your end—the thing that took the others."

"No," said he.

"Can you tell, Peter?"

"I can't tell—sure. I can guess. I guess I'm going to fix everything. If not, there's something too big—too ghastly—"

"But if you never came back to me—if anything—" She stopped. "Why Peter, I flung myself down sometimes. I prayed to be forgiven for ever having spoken to you. I begged relief from the hideous idea that I had let you start at all."

"Look here," he said severely. "Did you send me that warning—to the steamer?"

She was silent.

"Answer."

"Yes. I thought I must stop you, dear."

"Bad business," he said. "Look here, Brena. For the first time in my life I've been figuring what a real partnership really means. And it can't exist without perfect unbroken truth—playing the game, not separately, but together—all the time—an unbroken record."

She said, "I know. There isn't much to say. My fear. My conscience. And it was you who were going to take the risk. Not anybody else, Peter—and I loved you. I took the paper from a package from the chemist's shop. I wrote."

"It won't do," he said harshly. "It is a bad spot on the fruit."

For a long time she sat on the edge of his cot without a word. At last, "Peter."

"Yes."

"Tell me, Peter. There must have been times when you wondered about me—doubted me—questioned me. Did you keep faith?"

He waited, but his answer was clear. It was not only an answer to her question; in his voice there was more—an understanding of the truth that right and wrong are not readily divided with a high impassable wall between them. There is a teetering, and that which counts is the spirit of the game, that leads one to put weight most often on the right end. All this he said to her in the one word: "No!"

After a moment her hand came through the dark into his.

"I think we are all right, Peter," she said. "If we can ever have each other, dear—forever—I think we could—"

"Do what?"

"Work out something pretty fine."

"We will," he said. "I'm almost at the point where I score, Brena. I've brought a high-powered car here. Two hundred-odd miles into this hell of desert. And tomorrow, I go tomorrow."

He struck a match and relit the lantern.

"Tell me, Peter," she said, brushing the red-gold hair back from her forehead.

"I did tell you. I said I had a theory—a theory about where they went—Hennepin first—and Parmalee. If I am not right, heaven help us! I've not been afraid yet—not in my real self. If I'm right I'll laugh at myself for toting a gun around and for a lot of fool ideas I've had. But if I'm wrong now, I'd be afraid. I'm no coward, but I'd squirm with fear!"

Her eyes were full of a troubled expression.

"But you don't tell me, Peter."

"I can't."

"Why not?"

"Because if I was wrong it would always appear to you that I had been the inventor of injustice. Let me test your faith in me, Brena. Give me three days more."

"Yes, but when you ride off into the desert—to danger, you said, provided you were wrong—I'm going too."

"You can't."

"Yes, I am going with you, Peter."

"It might be too hideous."

"I am going."

The strange authority with which she sometimes spoke was now in her voice and in her eyes; it was as if she were speaking, not out of herself alone, but were one who voiced a decree of those who had willed an inexorable end.

"Let me show you then where we are going," he said with his lips pressed together. "Let me show you a map. Let me tell you how we shall have to steer our way over a trailless waste by compass as if we were at sea! It's a country of terrible distances and heat and thirst. If the car breaks down they'd never hear of us."

"We'd be out there for years," she said in the voice of one who in a great happiness feels sleep pulling down the eyelids, drawing its mists across the mind. "We'd have our hands—like this—together. But very bony, I suppose. I'd rather—do that, Peter—than—not have—each other—"

He picked her up in his arms. He felt her limp weight pulling at his shoulders. He heard her whispering, "I'm not ill, Peter. I'm just tired. And I don't have to pretend with you, do I?" He felt her warm breath.

He put her down at full length on the cot and sitting on the floor beside her he moved his fingertips across her white forehead. Her profile of features, of body, of drapery, made him think of the queens and saints carved in marble on the tops of sarcophagi in ancient abbeys; lying in this sordid little room, her face turned toward the smoky ceiling, nevertheless she had their calm, their suggestion of belonging to great emotions, a season of great deeds and to some grand continuity. Brena had been carved by a great sculptor, and the limp hand that still rested in sleep upon his bare neck was warm with the promise of living expectancies.

CHAPTER XVII

Brena, who had slept long and restfully in spite of the stinging dry heat, had awakened before the sun had gone down to find Peter was attending to the last details of equipping the high-powered car that he had bought in El Paso. It was below the window in the old courtyard with the crumbling adobe wall.

"Hello," he had said, looking up. "You just missed seeing the population of this town. The entire town were here. They don't know we're going to strike into the desert instead of going eastward."

He had held up his fingers to count on them. "We're all provisioned now—from the general store—gasoline cans, water in demijohns, matches, canned beans and other things, a bottle of olives, guaranteed very old, and one paper napkin. I say—why do you ever do your hair up at all? It's rather wonderful, falling all around like that."

"I didn't take it down."

"No, I did. I ran it through my fingers like a miser with his gold—and his untarnished copper threads, if a miser has them too. Why not braid it? We're going where there are no fashions, Brena."

"Today?"

"Tonight. There'll be a white moon as big as a plate for hours. We'll make a hundred miles at least through the depression that runs along the bed of some prehistoric torrent to the northwest. Thanks to old Father Carlos, the hard-headed Jesuit, it's on the map. Easy to follow."

When the purple crepe of evening had been spread over the baking sands and the stars had been set out in their infinite careless pattern in the high desert sky, the car, with opened muffler, turned her nose out of the trail that followed the line of the railroad and began to kick the sand behind as if she were a hound. It was as if she were leaving forever the sight and memory of mankind.

This country is without mercy to living things. After thirty miles of hard pulling through the bare loose-surfaced plain, tossed gently about as if they were riding in a motorboat over the long rollers of the sea, they saw before them on the crest of a sand wave a running pack of coyotes, who came up suddenly, black against the moonlight like dog fish lifted into sight on a wave. But after that all vegetation and even the cacti which stood like trained seals, their flappers held out as if ready to begin a dance, became sparse, and the emptiness was that of the frontier of death itself.

Peter turned to look at Brena. Her face, illumined by the moon, was lifted a little; with the hair blown back by the hot wind, her eyes glistened like those of one who rides toward battle in a calm spirit. She felt, perhaps, his gaze, and, turning, smiled. She wondered why he had been unwilling to tell her why they went, what he sought, the facts he had found.

"Will you tell me—afterward?" she asked.

"Yes—if I win," he answered. "I will tell you then. Before that I've no particular right to do it—not till I'm sure. The thing is too tremendous!"

When the moon had reached the bottom of the bowl of the sky, DeWolfe looked again at his speedometer.

"Did you notice that our searchlight no longer picks up little insects and turns them into flashes of silver?" he asked.

"Yes."

He stopped the car to fill the radiator.

"We are coming into the most arid land in the world, where no rain falls and there is no dew. It is the country of eternal stillness. There is no life; not even the insects exist here. There is no motion. There is no sound. Listen!"

Brena looked about at the great flat disk of the desert as she stood with her hand on Peter's shoulder; it was like a world of hardened concrete, without flexibility, without a motion. She listened and heard only her heart and the throb of silence that comes only in places of utter stillness.

"I'm glad I'm with you, Peter," she said. "There is a threat here, isn't there?"

He nodded. "We've been seventy-five miles. To a man on foot without water that would be death—a horrible death with the sand dragging at the feet—just like the flies one sees trying to pull their legs along fly paper, with the heat burning all moisture out of the body, with the silence and the stillness inviting him to madness, and his aching limbs gradually turning his footpath around and around in smaller circles to a center of death."

Peter had driven his car over the great flat disk, scarred with irregularity, but nevertheless like a talking machine record with its tiny impressions. The hours had called for endurance of smarting eyes that had stared so long for gullies or chasms, and of aching arm muscles that had held the twists and tugs of the front wheels. He allowed the car to come to a stop and shut off the engine.

"Both of us need a rest and water," he said to Brena. "And you need breakfast."

How Cannon Are Spiked

In former times when the old-fashioned type of cannon was used the guns were disabled by driving an iron spike into the opening at the breech through which fire was communicated to the powder. This was called "spiking" the cannon. It was done when it was necessary to leave the guns behind, to prevent their immediate use by the enemy. Such disablement was usually only temporary. The phrase, however, is retained in modern military usage. Spiking a cannon nowadays means breaking or carrying away part of the breech mechanism, making it impossible to use the gun without considerable repair.—Exchange.
