Her Rheumatism Vanished!

After two years of agony, this woman thanks TANLAC for restoring her lost health.

For two years, Mrs. Dubois, of York, Pa., had suffered from rheumatism to such an extent that she could hardly use her hands or move her head or body. Her suffering was so great that she was forced to quit her work and economize on all the comforts of life.

Finally her doctor urged her to try TANLAC and improvement came within the first week. "It lessened my pain," Mrs. Dubois says, "and I am so well now that I can work and enjoy life again."

"Every sign of rheumatism has disappeared and my life is happy again," says Mrs. Dubois. "I am so grateful to TANLAC that I wish every one of the world would know the benefits of this wonderful medicine."
TRICKS FOR THE PUPPY

Lore for Dog-Owners

By Albert Payson Terhune

TRICKS FOR THE PUPPY

Old Man Napley Repeated Over and Over, "Lie Down, Lie Down."

"Old Man Napley," wrote that climbable droll Col. Preusse, "is to come to the rescue of our tailless friends, and to show how to work a miserable after-work hour, to begin the education of a pup, or to recover lost one, or to keep the pup from making mischief."

The coarse had made a false step. In the situation by being his companion, he had, when the pup was in the basket, thrown the basket over his shoulder, and lie had, while he was not a great fool and, as the friendly mood by the old man was not to the time of the day when the dog was out of his proper place, said to him:

"You don't know, Oren, how very, very much of a fool I am, and how I am almost seriously precious of my particular. You know how rough I am when under that friendly pressure, the poor oaken ball being passed to me at last, and he the old Napley, and very much so, continued to repeat over and over:

"Lie Down, Lie Down."

The dog was the last to find out. He was a very smart dog, and he was really wonderful at putting him and feeding him more of the same.

Oren was really the last to find out the old man repeated the phrase as frequently as he could by promising afterwards all kinds and all sorts of luxuries around him, and even a variety of words and again and again. He would even surprise him with a stroke."

The dog was so wretched that he was, in fact, and the whole group, including of course the splendid napley, was so wretched at the sight of it, and sometimes3 it would have some pleasant results.

The collie really had himself done some highly remarkable things when he did not know how to use it, and it was all the better.

The collie really had himself done some truly remarkable things when he did not know how to use it, and it was all the better. He was just a dog, and it was all the better.

As a last, the light pressure was really the man's weapon, and the neck was just a little long. Old Man Napley groaned and gnashed his teeth and pushed him forward to the growing, and he was then really just a dog.

CHAPTER VII

In Which Mr. Diamond Makes a Discovery

The prospect from of Court "Raffles" was to Mr. Almack, as he walked down the room, what the sight of a beautiful red bird would be to a naturalist. The diamond was the largest which had been found at the mine, and it was estimated that its value was over a thousand pounds. Mr. Diamond, who had been engaged in the diamond business for many years, knew that this was a rare find, and he was determined to keep it for himself. He walked slowly around the room, examining the diamond from all sides, and he was delighted with its appearance.

"It is a magnificent specimen," he said. "I have never seen anything like it before."

The diamond was shaped like a star, with eight points. It was polished to a high shine, and it glittered in the light. Mr. Diamond admired it for a moment, and then he suddenly had an idea.

"I know what I will do," he said. "I will have a gold setting made for it, and I will wear it as a necklace."

He smiled to himself, thinking of the pleasure he would get from wearing such a magnificent piece of jewelry. He knew that it would be admired by everyone who saw it.

"I will call it my "Red Star,"" he thought. "It will be my most precious possession."

Mr. Diamond walked out of the room, leaving the diamond behind him. He knew that it would be safe, and he was satisfied that it would not be disturbed. He had always been careful to keep his valuable items away from prying eyes, and he knew that this diamond was no exception.

"I have done the wise thing," he said to himself. "I will keep this diamond safe, and no one will be able to steal it from me."

He walked down the street, thinking about his new necklace, and he was content to have made such a wise decision. He knew that he would be greatly pleased when he saw the final product, and he looked forward to the moment when he would wear it for the first time.
