Electric Devices Oust the Divining Rod

New Ways of Finding Ore Bodies in Earth

Washington—Man's long search for and mining of metals and ore may soon be at an end. At least the search will be greatly simplified because the ore body can be practically detected by electric devices. Many of these devices are now ready for mining engineers to try in the search for ore bodies. The devices are so sensitive that they can detect ore bodies which are too small to be seen with the naked eye.

WASHINGTON.—Seventeen years, of electric ore-traps are being developed through the agency of Geophysics and associated companies. The equipment may be used for locating and recovering minerals in the earth. The electric devices are designed to detect the presence of minerals in the earth and to locate them accurately.

diverted. In finding fields where the beds of the earth are not at an angle, the electric devices can be used to locate the presence of minerals in the earth and to locate them accurately.

The bureau of mines in each country is expected to receive the results of the work done by the electric devices and to make use of them in the search for ore bodies.

Chapter Title

"And I'm afraid of making too much noise."

"Where's your hat?"

"I've never had a hat," said the young man, as he adjusted his cap. "And I'm afraid of making too much noise."

"Oh, I see."

The young man smiled, his eyes twinkling mischievously. "I promise not to make too much noise."

Cross-Word Puzzle

Fruit Maturity Told by Tester

"A trick still remains, even in the hearts of languages, which is never passed off as being quite mastered," wrote a poet. "An invitation, therefore, to be taken as an indication of the society's progress. By means of a 'knowledge of the language' a change in meaning has been made to be a change in the understanding of the world. The poet, therefore, is an offspring of the new and the first language, and the new and the first language are still being merged.
