The Magna Charta of the Northwest Presidio and Other Statements—Slavery Inhibited—Political Development of the New Territory

By James L. Smith

The basis of the political life of the nation, the fundamental charter, the Magna Charta of the Northwest Presidio, was enacted in 1787 by the Continental Congress. This charter was the result of the work of a commission appointed by Congress to prepare a plan for the government of the Northwest Territory. The commission consisted of three members: George Washington, Thomas Jefferson, and George Mason. The charter was adopted by Congress on July 16, 1787, and was signed by the President of the United States, George Washington.

The charter provided for the organization of the Northwest Territory into several territories, each to be governed by a territorial legislature. Each territory was to have a governor appointed by the President of the United States. The charter also provided for the appointment of a federal judge for the Northwest Territory, with jurisdiction over all cases arising under the laws of the United States.

The charter was a significant step in the development of the political structure of the United States. It established the principle of self-government for the territories, and it provided for the eventual admission of new states into the Union. The charter also established the principle of equal representation in the legislature, which was a significant step in the development of democracy in the United States.

METHUSELAH'S WIFE

BY EUGENIE CHAMBERLAIN

WHO MARRIED TOO MUCH

Russo hung over the dinner table, and Laurel was staring at him. "I think you'll have some fun with this," she said, "if you keep on as you're doing."" "Oh, dear, yes," Russo said. "I think it'll be all right."

And so it was. The great moment came, and Russo was playing the piano. Laurel was staring at him. "How was it?" she asked. "Did it go well?"

"It's hard to say," Russo replied. "I was a little nervous, but it went all right."

Laurel smiled. "I'm glad," she said. "I thought you'd enjoy yourself.

They talked and laughed, and soon the music was over. They went back to the table and talked some more.

And so it went on. Russo was playing the piano every night, and Laurel was sitting by his side. They were happy, and they were content. They were living in Methuselah's Wife, and they had the world at their feet.
