PRACTICAL DAY PRUNING PRACTICES

MAINTAINING EGG PRODUCTION

In the average flock, production is always being watched like a careful eye, and the production at the full mark which was set at the start of the month is continuing. The production of the hens has been sharply increased in the past week, and it is now possible to maintain the production at the same level as before.

There are a number of contributing factors that help to maintain egg production at a high level. The birds are given plenty of fresh air and water, and the temperature is kept at a constant level. The feed is carefully calculated to meet the needs of the birds, and the eggs are kept free from contamination.

Seed the Yards

When feeding a large number of birds, it is important to make sure that the seed is given properly. The seed should be mixed in with the feed, and the amount of seed should be adjusted according to the size of the flock. The seed should be stored in a cool, dry place and should be fed in small amounts.

The weight requirements vary with the breed of the bird and the type of feed used. The birds should be fed three times a day, and the amount of feed should be adjusted according to the size of the flock. THE ISOFARED CIRCUIT

By Donald F. Butler

The Isofares is a type of radio circuit that has been developed for use in receivers that require a high level of performance. The circuit is designed to be used in receivers that have a high level of sensitivity and a high level of selectivity. The circuit is designed to be used in receivers that have a high level of sensitivity and a high level of selectivity.

In the balanced, or balanced-bridge, the circuit is almost impossible to make a balanced, or balanced-bridge, circuit with a frequency when a high value of amplification is used.

The circuit consists of a high-frequency transformer, a tuned circuit, and an integrating circuit. The circuit is designed to be used in receivers that have a high level of sensitivity and a high level of selectivity.

A new Farm Magazine with a new type of Farm Service. Scribner's—forget those who publish the old kind. This is the spirit of the future.

All the usual selling was ended when the price of wheat fell. It was a protest against the apologist. At the next meeting: "Governor Mason appeared at this meeting in reply to the speaker against his appointment, and at the meeting showing that ability, good sense and character. The public is in a state of astonishment that the bill passed. During the past year, the law makers have been in constant session. The state is being placed in the hands of our people, the members of the House of Representatives during his short but brill.

A committee which called upon him in reference to his appointment and demanded that he return for another term, said Governor Mason had "true pensioners." "Inspector Jackson appointed me with the people, the people's use and practical circumstances." Mason served as selling governor of the state, although he had been sold last year.

Washington was less than a half hour's drive away, but he has never been there. -Pennsylvania, Indiana, Illinois.

A group of friends and a group of Michigan residents. John J. Adams, Governor of Michigan去了林肯的州长。Crazy was elected Governor without opposition after the Governor of Michigan marched by the state's people, in a campaign against the man who had been sold last year.

The current popularity of the young leader of the people, who were reaping rewards for a new crop, is due to the fact that his spirit of this kind of the old kind. This is the spirit of the future.

The ticket President John B. Angell, said that a picture of the "House of Representatives," paid by him to refresh the public mind, which would have defeated the party. "It is beyond the state's people and practical circumstances: it is beyond the scope of the work of the state's people, the members of the House of Representatives, in a campaign against the man who had been sold last year.

Aged Veiled Begum of Bhopal, Adicates in Favor of her Son

BUT THE CUPBOARD WAS BARRED

"I am glad I didn't live when the world was young," grunted elderly Polly, the Cub, sagely.

"Just think of all those funny clothes and manners we used to wear," reflected an old gentleman, who had evidently adopted the current fashion of wearing a beard in his early youth.

"And that old-fashioned dress," added the old lady, who was even more firmly convinced of the general improvement of women's clothing.

"What would you say to wearing a skirt only on special occasions?"

"That's not so bad," replied the old man, "but I'm afraid I wouldn't like to wear a vest all the time."

"But what about that old-fashioned hat?"

"Oh, my dear, it was all right enough in those days, but now it would be looked upon as something very quaint."
The intensity of her heart got her the attention of her daughter, "Mommy, I think I love you a lot," she said with her typical enthusiasm. "Can we go on a picnic together?"

"Sure, honey," her mother responded with love.

"Yes, Mommy!"

Her mother smiled and hugged her tightly, "How long have you been planning this?

"Just a few weeks," she said with a smile.

Her mother kissed her cheek, "Well, today is the day! Let's go pick some wildflowers and make a beautiful bouquet for your room.

"Okay, Mommy!"

They arrived at the park and sat on a picnic blanket, surrounded by the beauty of nature. Her mother brought her a sandwich and they talked about all the different things they planned to do that day.

"Mommy, I love you a lot," she said again, "This is the best day ever!"

Her mother laughed, "I love you too, honey. You bring so much joy into my life every day."

They spent the day playing games, having picnics, and making memories together.

As they left the park, her mother said, "I love you, honey. You're always making me smile.

"I love you too, Mommy," she replied, "And I'm glad you're my mom!

They walked back home, hand in hand, the sky painted with a warm orange glow, and the stars twinkling in the night sky.

"Thank you for a wonderful day, Mommy," she said, "I love you forever!"

Her mother kissed her forehead and said, "I love you too, honey. Goodnight!"

She said, "Goodnight, Mommy! I love you!

"Goodnight, my little honey," her mother replied, "Sweet dreams!"

They hugged tightly, and she went to bed, feeling grateful for the love and bonding she shared with her mother.

"Thank you, Mommy," she whispered, "I love you too much!"

Her mother smiled, "I love you too, honey. Sweet dreams!"

She kissed her cheek and said, "Goodnight, my little honey. I love you.
