Present-Day Industrial Needs Demand the Movement of Freight at Express Service Speed of Former Years.

With the wage-time expansion in America, the greater post-war costs of materials and supplies, and the increased demand for consumer goods has now become a serious problem. The railroads, being the primary means of transportation, have felt the impact of this increased demand. The movement of the war was continued in the post-war period, but the present demand for improvements and betterments gave these an added incentive to the railways that followed the close of the war. Now, the railroads are being made to the extent that this is reflected in the greater traffic their railroads are serving.

The railroad traffic—thus the ten of freight—is traveling more miles every day than ever.

The additional mileage made by each ton of freight per mile means that the consumer must utilize his plant to greater advantage by clearing from the shipping terminal regularly and carrying a larger inventory in his store room. The distributor at his location can likewise carry on business with a smaller inventory because he can always keep a regulated delivery on his hands. The manufacturer pays through his bills of lading at the bank several days earlier than before and its capital is turned over oftener.

All of these conditions mean better to every stratum of society.

The railroad worker is paid higher wages for his services, since the railroad is doing more work, and their cost of coal makes the possible.

The consumer of commodities finds that prices are kept down to a lower level than would otherwise have been.

The business man, who ventures into modern business, can carry on with a smaller capital.

All, therefore, share in the benefits of the accelerated freight service.

NOWHERE else under heaven’s blue canopy is this so apparent.

NOWHERE in America are these conditions more applicable than in the territory served by the Michigan Railroad Association, an industrial area which is making the greater forwarding strides on this continent.

DEADLOCKED ROMANCES

By E. R. French

How to Get Married in a Meek and Modest Way

For the many young men who have "gone together" for months or years and have finally reached the moment of truth, but are still undecided whether they should be married or not, this advice may be of interest.

For each romance that is deadlocked, there are usually two or more solutions. In some cases, the woman is so anxious to marry that she is willing to accept any decision the man makes. In other cases, the man is so anxious that the woman's opinion is of little importance.

Sometimes it is possible for both sides to agree upon a compromise solution, such as a trial marriage or living together until one party makes up their minds. But in many cases, the only solution is to break off the relationship entirely and start over again.

The following advice is based upon the individual situations, but is generally applicable in cases of deadlock.

In the case of a man who is in love with his fiancée, it is usually best for him to look seriously at the reasons why he is unhappy. If he finds that his love is based upon a superficial understanding of his fiancée, it may be wise for him to break off the relationship and look for a more satisfying emotional bond.

In the case of a woman who is in love with her fiancé, it is usually best for her to consider the man's feelings. If she finds that he is unhappy, it may be wise for her to break off the relationship and look for a more satisfying emotional bond.

Doctor Found Women and Children Sick More Often Than Men

As a family doctor at Monticello, Illinois, the whole human body, not just the sick, is my concern. I have seen that women and children are more often affected by illness than men. Their illness may be caused by a variety of factors, such as poor nutrition, lack of exercise, and stress. But their illness is usually treated by their mothers and fathers. Every once in a while, a patient comes to me who is suffering from a condition that I cannot help with. But in my experience, I have seen that women and children are more often affected by illness than men.
