POULTRY LAYING FLOORS.

For the most efficient production of eggs, a continuous laying floor of proper size and type is essential. A continuous laying floor of the right size and type is essential. It must be large enough to provide space for laying, but not so large as to allow the birds to spend too much time on the floor. The laying floor should be well heated, to prevent the birds from getting cold. It should also be well illuminated, to provide the necessary light for laying.

One thing to remember in artificial lighting is that proper heat is essential for proper laying. If the heat is not sufficient, the eggs will be small and thin. If the heat is too high, the eggs will be large and thin. The heat should be regulated to provide a comfortable environment for the birds.

Feature of Raspberry Growing: Rakes with Snow

Raspberry growing will be made easier in Michigan if the state department of agriculture provides rakes with snow. Rakes with snow will help to control the diseases that affect raspberry plants. The department of agriculture is studying the possibility of using rakes with snow to control the diseases that affect raspberry plants. They are also interested in the possibility of using rakes with snow to control the diseases that affect other types of plants, such as wheat.

It may be said for Mr. Pernuteklor that his speeches were not altogether good. He had a good story to tell about the Ford, but he knew Dwight as a man of little ability.

Dwight's first day was a success.
