"The Mantle of the Old Pontchartrain"

With the passing of the old Pontchartrain, something went out of the life of New Orleans and something from the welcome of travelers to this city.

The new Denny-Leland went boldly back to the spirit that built the Pontchartrain. The imitation which the architectural detractors have challenged has blossomed in these broad avenues of marble, these rich, deep-piled carpets, these graceful staircases and approaches covering the lobby, is well met by the inner spirit of hospitality and experienced skill in your service.

And they delightfully larger rooms—homelike, quiet and beautifully furnished. The lounge, the smoking room, the music room, the conservatory, all rendered out of the old Pontchartrain.

It is fitting that Wm. J. Chittenden, Jr., extended to you, here, the same old-time hospitality over which he presided as manager of the beheaded Pontchartrain.
