CORN BORER STUDY REVEALS ODDITIES IN INSECT WORLD

Searching European fields for parasitic insects that prey on the European corn borer, entomologists of the United States Department of Agriculture have come on strangely contrasting relationships in the insect world.

For example, with a species known as Eulimneria crassifemur, the females, equipped with long egg-laying organs, search out the borers working between the leaves or even within the corn plant. They deposit several eggs, sometimes as many as 10 or 15. These develop, but all except one are found dead within the borer. Only one, the first to hatch, exercises a sort of insect right of primogeniture, and lives. Entomologists explain that the eldest probably excretes and pours into the blood of the corn borer a secretion fatal to the younger brothers and sisters. Having forced the borer thus to help off his rivals, the senior parasite feeds on the corn borer.

In contrast, a distant cousin, Panteles thompsoni, also lays several eggs within the corn borer. In this case, however, the eggs hatch and the Apanteles brood continues to develop in peace and amity. After, as the scientific report states, "devouring the contents of the host," these "emerge and spin their delicate cocoons in a rather loosely connected mass within the tunnel of the host and upon his empty skin." Scientists are particularly interested in this parasite—which was first discovered and described in the Bureau of Entomology's search for borer parasites—because the parasites discovered and the colonies which have females exclusively with no males in evidence.

This is an example of parthenogenesis, or reproduction without fertilization.

A third parasite, of the 20 species that have been identified and studied, is Microbracon brevicornis, which may also reproduce without fertilization, but in this case the young are all males. In case of fertilization the offspring are a mixture of males and females. This particular mother has the habit, unnamable to the corn-borer host, of paralyzing her prey by injecting a poisonous fluid, after which she deposits from 10 to 20 eggs, leaving the eggs to hatch, the brood until they are ready to spin their cocoons. The mother goes on to find other corn borers which may be forced to serve as combined incubators and diet kitchens.

Good Yields Follow Use of Fertilizers

That corn in Michigan gives a profitable return for investments in commercial fertilizers is shown by the crops produced by winners in the last five acre corn growing contest.

Sixteen out of the 21 highest yields in region 1 were grown on soil that received an application of commercial fertilizers, and all eight of the growers in regions 2 and 3 used commercial fertilizers.

The best yield of corn in the contest was 107 bushels of shelled corn per acre. In addition to the fertilizer, this crop had the advantage of being grown on a sweet clover sod.

Weather conditions this spring indicate that fertilizers will be especially valuable, according to the soils department at Michigan State College.

Weather conditions will delay planting dates in many cases, and the use of fertilizer will give the crop an initial start that will perhaps be the means of maturing it ahead of the frost date.

On light soils, an analysis of 2-16-2 or 4-16-4 at the rate of 125 to 150 pounds per acre is recommended. For heavy soils, a superphosphate or 2-16-2 at the rate of 150 to 175 pounds per acre is advised. Manures should be reinforced by the addition of superphosphates.

19,000 Chicks Cremated

Nineteen thousand chicks perished in a fire which swept the brooder house on the Gitre Cass County Poultry farm, said to be the largest in Michigan, a mile east of the Niles city limits Sunday. The farm is on the Niles-Cassopolis highway. The loss was estimated at $18,000. The building was completely destroyed. Insurance covers only $7,500 of the loss. The blaze started in a boiler room adjoining the brooder house and spread so rapidly that the Niles fire department, which responded to an alarm, was unable to cope with the flames.

United States Uses Billions of Matches

Americans use more matches than the people of any other nation, the estimated number being a billion billion a year. It might seem that almost any kind of wood would do to make matches. But this is far from being the case. In fact, only the best grade of timber is used for this purpose, no sapwood, knotty or cross grained lumber being utilized in this way. Nor are scraps and left-over pieces of wood used for match making. Matches are not a by-product of the making of larger articles, but doors and sashes and similar necessities are made from the lumber discarded by the match manufacturers.

There are many ways of making matches, each company having its own favored system, often worked out by its own experts and chemists. One match making machine has been known to turn out 177,926,400 matches in one day, boxed and labeled, ready for shipment.

It would be impossible to describe the many ways of making matches in the numerous factories devoted to this industry in the United States. Some matches are shaved with the grain of the wood from sawed blocks. Others are cut both ways by saws. In another factory the blocks are boiled to make them cut easily. There's a machine on which boiled or steamed logs are revolved and a shaving the thickness of a match is cut round and round. This shaving is at the same time cut into match sticks. Round matches are made by forcing them through dies.

Wisconsin Growers to Visit Michigan in June

Closer cooperation between the cherry growers of Door county, Wisconsin, and the Grand Traverse region in Michigan may result from a horticultural tour by the Badger state growers through the cherry belt in Benzie, Leelanau and Grand Traverse counties this month.

About 100 members of the Door County Fruit Growers association at Sturgeon Bay are planning to ferry across Lake Michigan, docking at Frankfort, to spend two and possibly three days touring the cherry country. They will be guests of the Michigan State Horticultural Society and the cherry interests of the Grand Traverse region. If time will permit they also may inspect orchards in Manistee, Mason and Oceana counties before returning to Sturgeon Bay by boat.

Wisconsin and Michigan cherry growers have been attempting to get together on an advertising campaign for years but have made little progress. Should the visitors' orchards set a full crop this year and they find a similar production in prospect in Michigan, it may help to further the advertising movements.

ARTICHOKES VALUABLE

Jerusalem artichokes are similar in food value to potatoes. Since they grow somewhat irregular in shape, the easiest way to prepare them for the table is to boil or bake them in skins and then part them. Boiled Jerusalem artichokes can be served in cream or other well seasoned sauces, fried, or baked in a sauce with grated cheese and buttered crumbs spread on top. Baked Jerusalem artichokes may be served in their skins, or scraped out and seasoned with butter, salt and pepper.

PRODUCERS MUM ON 1928 BEAN ACREAGE

Michigan farmers are trying to keep the acreage they intend to plant to beans a close secret, according to an out-of-state agricultural specialist who has attempted to learn the crop prospects in this state.

"That Michigan farmers realize the fallacy of increasing their bean acreage is evident by the fact that most of them, while preparing to add a few more acres of beans, are at the same time disclaiming such intentions," writes this specialist. "I suppose they do not want their neighbors to get in 'on the big money.'"

The greatest increase in the bean acreage will take place in eastern Michigan, the report indicates.

"In most cases," it continued, "this increase will be at the expense of some other crop, especially sugar beets. I believe this is a very poor policy and will result in disastrously low prices for beans next fall. At the same time the sugar beet industry will be handicapped again with a low acreage per factory.

"I believe the newspapers will be doing their farmer readers a service if this situation is called to their attention before it is too late."

PRACTICES DIFFER

In parts of Ohio, Indiana and Michigan the corn borer has made necessary changes in farming practices. In Farmers' Bulletin 1562-F, "Farm Practices Under Corn Borer Conditions," the problem in the infested areas is discussed, with attention to control measures and possible changes in farming practices.

OCEAN GOING SHIPS ARRIVE AT SOUTH HAVEN

Transatlantic navigation was opened at South Haven with the arrival of three Norwegian ships bringing from Fowey, England, clay for the Kalamazoo Valley paper mills. The ships "Bill," "Elstone" and "Ole Aarvold" arrived Sunday and Monday. Each ship discharged a cargo of about 3,000 tons of clay. According to H. J. Dollinger, secretary of the Chamber of Commerce, two other steamships of similar tonnage are due in June.

The South Haven Terminal Improvement company has called a meeting for the immediate future to consider plans for further development of South Haven's harbor facilities. There is talk of a warehouse, 200 by 72 feet in dimensions for storage purposes, also extension of railroad sidings, and dockage improvements.

"We have demonstrated beyond a question of doubt," said Secretary Dollinger, "that the all-water route for handling both clay and pulp is feasible and desirable. We intend now to go after other lines of imports, as well as export trade. There is a large amount of foreign business being developed right in this section of Michigan and we believe we can handle it and cut down freight rates materially."

Fords Greet Transatlantic Flyers in Auto City

ESSEX BODIES MAKE "GOOD BOATS"

When the steamship Sultana pulled into Chicago recently after a severe storm on Lake Michigan, Capt. David Smith reported a remarkable happening with 42 Essex Super-Six sedans and coaches which were swept overboard.

Capt. Smith reported that instead of sinking the cars floated readily amid the high-rolling waves and could be seen still afloat as the ship traveled out of sight. As they were closed cars, tightly constructed and with all doors and windows closed, his theory is that the air within the bodies was sufficient to float them until waves should break the window glass or capsize the whole automobile in the wave troughs.

"That was a sight for you—a line-up of cars like a miniature formation of battleships," said Capt. Smith. "They were loosened from the deck in whole rows when the rope lashing broke, consequently they slipped overboard in regular formation. I expected them to go to the bottom immediately, but not one of them did so. The air kept them up and the axles, motor and frame acted as ballast. They're of good balance, for they floated erectly and steadily in the heavy seas. This was the hardest storm I have seen in many years on the Great Lakes."

The cars were on their way—the season's first water shipment—to the Hudson Motor company of Illinois. The cars were insured, and J. R. Histed, general manager and vice-president of the concern, was scarcely down-hearted at all about the incident.

World's Greatest Beacon To Flash June 30th

The world's greatest beacon will flash for the first time in connection with aviation's greatest day—the Detroit Air-Olympics—to be held in Detroit on June 30.

The beacon is the huge light that tops the new Penobscot building, now nearing completion. Being 665 feet above the street, it is said to be the highest light of its kind ever constructed. The building itself is 47 stories tall; the light is still another 100 feet higher, mounted on a shapely steel tower.

The beacon will flame into life for the first time on the evening of June 29, the day before Detroit again makes aeronautical history with the Air-Olympics. The light was to have been turned on a few days earlier. Through arrangements completed, with William M. MacLachlan, general manager of the new building, by Harvey Campbell, secretary and vice president of the Detroit Board of Commerce, it was decided to first illuminate the city's highest tower in honor of the aerial program.

The glow of the light will be visible for 60 miles in clear weather, with a 40 mile visibility range in fog. It consists of a red ball of fire, 12 feet in diameter. Structurally, the beacon employs a steel globe covered over with large neon gas tubes. In addition to being the world's largest and highest beacon, this light also will be the greatest yet constructed for use of neon gas.

The Penobscot Beacon is intended primarily as an aid to aerial navigators, Mr. MacLachlan said. With its great visibility, it should prove extremely valuable in identifying the city to future fliers. To complete this usefulness, there also will be constructed an illuminated arrow pointing to the Ford Airport, with a number to designate distance in miles. Another arrow will be placed later to locate any property that may be acquired by the city as a municipal airport.

The light will show a flashing signal, probably three seconds on and two seconds off. As protection against hail and other weather dangers, the neon tubes will be constructed of extra heavy glass. An elaborate ceremony is being arranged to accompany the initial flash of the powerful beacon, which will announce to more than one-half the people of Michigan the imminence of Detroit's air program.

The events of the day are the Fourth National Air Tour, the Gordon Bennett International Balloon Race and the Boys' National Model Airplane Contest. More than a score of pilots are expected to participate in the 6,000 mile reliability tour to some 20 cities in 13 states. Eight countries will be represented in the balloon race, with three bags to be entered from this country. Two countries—Argentina and Denmark—never before have competed in a Bennett race.

Boys from all over the United States will bring their little ships here for the model airplane contest. They will compete for two trophies, the indoor trophy donated by William B. Stout and the famous Mulvihill outdoor award. The winners then will go to London to compete in the international competition. Other events of the program will be an exhibition of glider flying and an air circus to be presented by fliers of the First Pursuit Group of Selfridge field.

Paw Paw May Get New Postoffice Building

According to Postmaster William C. Mosier of Paw Paw, a United States postoffice inspector will soon visit Paw Paw to review the local situation in reference to the erection of the lease of a larger and better equipped postoffice. Postmaster Mosier recently returned from Washington, D. C., where he had been in consultation with Congressman John C. Ketcham and the supervising architect of the United States Bureau of new building.

According to classification, Paw Paw ranks 600 on the eligible list of cities to receive awards.

1928 PROSPECTS FOR BUSINESS IN STATE HELD GOOD

Business in Michigan is gradually picking up after a lengthy slump, and prospects for the rest of the year are good, according to the monthly business review by Wayne W. Putnam of the Union Trust Co. of Detroit.

In his report, which covers all leading industries in the state, Mr. Putnam says in part:

"Building contracts awarded in March in Michigan brought the total for the first quarter of the year up to $1,485,067,000. This is the highest first quarter ever recorded, and a gain of 6 per cent compared with the same quarter in 1927.

"The enlargement in operations in the steel and automobile industries has been more than seasonal. Steel ingot production for the first quarter was larger than it was for the same period in 1927. Operations for the entire industry are now at 84½ per cent of capacity.

"Automobiles manufactured during the first three months of this year amounted to 1,000,982 vehicles, a gain of 5,575 units compared with the corresponding months a year ago. "The high rate of activity in these three fundamental industries combined with the improved agricultural situation assure a good volume of business in the aggregate throughout 1928.

"Michigan's industries generally are expanding and constitute one of the brightest spots in the nation's economic situation. Manufacturing activity for the state as a whole is higher than it was a year ago.

"Automobile factories and plants producing automobile parts and accessories are operating at a high level. Agricultural implement and cereal factories are entering their busy season. Numerous iron foundries are finding business brisker. Paper mills are fairly active. The copper industry continues to improve and is the best it has been in recent years. Several iron mines are closed, but the opening of navigation on the Great Lakes is expected to restore conditions to normal. Lumber mills are running full time.

"March output for the entire automotive industry is estimated at approximately 425,000 cars and trucks compared with 417,686 units for the same month last year.

Michigan State Fair Has $125,000 Prize List

Prizes totaling more than $125,000 will be awarded at the Michigan State Fair, Sept. 2-8, the most impressive premium list in the history of the fair, according to state fair officials. Last year the prizes were approximately $107,000. Awards for live stock, pet stock and poultry, amounting to $44,115, are included in the largest general appropriation. A prize list of $30,250 is for racing, draft and standard-bred horses.

There will be a variety of exhibits at the fair, including live stock, horticultural, floricultural, agricultural, dairy and commercial displays. There will be horse shows in the Coliseum, 21 acts of vaudeville and the fireworks spectacle, "A Night in Bagdad."

Horticultural, floricultural and agricultural displays—one of the most beautiful and impressive attractions at the fair, will be housed in the $100,000 building set aside for these three exhibits, where color and profusion of flowers will run riot. This modern and complete structure, completed only two years ago, will have its exhibits under the auspices of the State Department of Agriculture, the Michigan State College, prominent florists and farmers from all sections of Michigan.

The 1928 Official Premium List, the catalog which designates prizes for entries in every department at the fair, is now ready and will be mailed free to anyone addressing the state fair offices at the fair grounds.

A large number of commercial exhibits housed in three separate buildings, already include many Detroit and nationally known firms. The Canadian government Conservation Department will have an impressive exhibit and the U. S. Shipping Board will call attention, by graphic displays, to its worldwide travel and shipping facilities.

Lieut. Commander John Philip Sousa and his internationally famous band of 70 musicians and soloists, will open the fair on Sunday afternoon, Sept. 2, with a sacred concert in the Coliseum.

For the thousands who come annually to the fair by automobile, special parking grounds have been provided. Midway attractions will be complete and interesting. The gate admission price will be 25 cents, the same as last year.

Students Buy Plane

Twelve students from the advanced classes in aeronautics at Cass Technical High School have formed a club under the guidance of Captain Ray Collins, manager of the aviation department of the Union Trust Company. They have purchased a new Waco Ten plane, incorporating under the name "The Aircrafters."

The club will make its flight headquarters at the Julia M. Barker Commercial Airport field on Ford Road and Hicks Road. Here the members will receive flying lessons from their pilot and manager, R. W. Kent, transport pilot with the Ford Motor Company. W. H. Lawrence is president of the club; Ray Rehnlund, treasurer, and T. Maher, secretary.

Bay City Firm Expands

Valley Castings and Pattern Company of Bay City will soon remove parts of its equipment to the new addition now under construction, the third to be added since the plant was founded in the city in 1923. The new unit will house the offices, pattern shop and the brass and copper foundry. This expansion means that the capacity of the brass foundry will be trebled. William Mueller is president of the company and Edward C. Smith, secretary-treasurer.

COL. A. C. GILLEM TO COMMAND AT CAMP CUSTER

Col. Alvin C. Gillem, chief of staff of the 65th cavalry division (organized reserves), with headquarters in Chicago, Ill., has been selected as the commanding officer of Camp Custer for the summer training season. This announcement was made by Brig. Gen. Paul B. Malone, commanding general of the 6th corps area. Col. Gillem will succeed Col. Henry E. Eames, who died at Fort Sheridan, Ill., hospital a short time ago.

Lieut. Col. Thomas L. Sherburne, commanding officer of the R. O. T. C. units at Michigan State College, will be the executive officer of the summer training camp at Camp Custer.

Col. Gillem will remain at Camp Custer until the camp is over about Sept. 1. In addition to training the Citizen Military Training camp students he also will have a large contingent of R. O. T. C. students, several hundred reserve officers and one battalion of regular army troops.

Cars Cheaper Than Food

New spring automobiles, fresh from the factory, cost less per pound than the butter, coffee and tea of the average American family, according to statistics worked out by Dodge Brothers, Inc.

The new Standard Six sedan of the company costs 3 cents a pound, the Victory Six sedan costs 40 cents a pound and the Senior Six sedan costs approximately 45 cents a pound. Average food prices as of January 15, as compared by the U. S. Bureau of Labor Statistics, show coffee selling at 48.5 cents per pound, butter at 57.8 cents per pound and tea at 77.4 cents per pound.

Elimination of Pullman Surcharge Will Involve Loss of $40,000,000 to Railroads and Will Shift the Burden Upon Those Who Do Not Enjoy the Service

THE Senate Committee has reported out favorably the Robinson bill eliminating the Pullman surcharge. This action, while apparently a popular one, is class legislation and as such is bound to involve losses not only to the railroads, but to the traveling public who ride in the day coaches and to a number of communities that now enjoy sleeping car service.

TO the Railroads, it involves immediately a loss of $40,000,000 in revenue annually, which will have to be made up somehow. The surcharge is the only revenue that the railroads get for the hauling of the heavier equipment and the incidental special service of parking this equipment at the stations and in coach yards. In fact, the railroads have always had to pay to the Pullman Company a certain small charge for the mileage of each Pullman car and besides a guarantee of a certain minimum of return covering a period of years. All of the returns for berths, etc., go to the Pullman Company excepting the surcharge.

THE surcharge was found necessary by the United States Railroad Administration. Its continuance has been recommended by the Interstate Commerce Commission after an exhaustive study of the entire question of passenger travel returns.

THE Pullman sleeping car after all is a hotel on wheels. It provides an unusual service. It represents a heavy investment per passenger. The berth charge and the surcharge of 50 per cent (which latter is the only revenue the railroads derive from this high class service) together, are not out of line with the charge for a room in a modern high class hotel.

SINCE the Pullman sleeping car passenger enjoys greater comfort than does the passenger in the day coach, he should expect to pay for the added comfort. The Pullman passenger is allotted two and one half times as much space as the person riding in the day coach. The car weight per passenger of the average day coach—assuming that it is filled—is about 6,800 pounds. The car weight per passenger of the average Pullman sleeping car—assuming that sleeper is filled—is about 12,260 pounds. The cost to the railroad of hauling a sleeping car passenger is, therefore, approximately twice as much. Should not the sleeping car passenger pay for these additional privileges to the passenger and the obligations devolving upon the railroads?

ANOTHER illustration: The sleeping car lines to Michigan resorts in summer and to Florida or California resorts in the winter, are seasonal movements. The travel is all in one direction, which means that the return movement is an empty one.

RAILROADS have only two main sources of income—passenger revenues and freight revenues.

THE wiping out of $40,000,000 annually in passenger revenues involved in the abolition of the surcharge on Pullman fares must inevitably do one of three things:

1. Result in cutting down of passenger train service now provided by American Railroads;
2. Restricting sleeping car service on the less prosperous lines;
3. Or, shifting the burden of the loss upon the shippers of freight.

ANY one of these expedients is unfair to the general public, that section who ride in the day coaches.

IT is a good principle of business at all times to require the person who enjoys a special service to pay for that special service.

THE Pullman surcharge requires just that.

THE abolition of the surcharge, therefore, constitutes class or sumptuary legislation, which is not desirable in this day and age.

THE railroads do not object to governmental regulation by the proper tribunal—the Interstate Commerce Commission—constituted to deal with the transportation industry exclusively.

WRITE your senator or congressman to-day protesting against this uneconomic and unfair measure.

"..but what will it cost me to buy that car on time?"

WHEN you buy a car for cash, you pay the factory price plus freight, war tax and delivery charges. When you buy on time, you pay an additional charge which includes fire and theft insurance. This additional amount is known as a "finance charge."

The finance charges on General Motors cars are low because the General Motors Acceptance Corporation was organized to assure sound credit practice and low rates to those of its customers who prefer to purchase on time. The Acceptance Corporation operates the GMAC Plan of payment. The Plan is simple, fair and economical. Its large volume of business reduces costs. It is conducted to give you satisfaction and to keep your goodwill.

When you buy a General Motors car on the GMAC Plan, you pay the cash delivered price—plus only the low GMAC financing charge—nothing more!

The Plan is available only through General Motors dealers. Another reason for buying your next car—whether new or used—from a General Motors dealer.

Buy your next car on the GMAC Plan

The General Motors cars are Chevrolet, Pontiac, Oldsmobile, Oakland, Buick, LaSalle and Cadillac.
Together they make up a line of 86 models, ranging in price-at-the-factory from $495 to $5500. They are the quality cars of the various car price classes.

Whatever make and model you choose—whether it be of the highest price, or the lowest—you will get a beautiful body (the closed bodies are by Fisher), 4-wheel brakes, a powerful engine, and a quality of design, materials and performance that only General Motors, by reason of its resources and its policy of continuous improvement, is in a position to give.

And the final touch in your satisfaction will come when you buy it on the GMAC Plan. The transaction will be in your interest. The rates will be low.
And the dealer will not lose interest in you after the down payment is made.

FLINT IS WINNER AT MT. PLEASANT

Enthusiastic competition between 1,461 pupils of 91 high schools of Michigan in tests covering a range of 20 academic and 15 vocational subjects established a new record for the third annual state high school scholastic contest at Central State Teachers' college at Mt. Pleasant.

Six trophy shields were awarded schools with the highest number of points in each of three classes, for both academic and vocational subjects. Two hundred and ten pins were presented winners of first and second places in each subject.

With some pupils entered in two subjects the actual number of tests given, graded and recorded by faculty and college students was approximately 2,000. Winners were announced and prizes awarded at a general assembly three hours after the last tests were given. Winners by schools are:

Academic subjects, class A, B schools with more than 300 enrollment, first, Flint Central, 42 points; second, Alma, 21, and third, St. Johns, 20. Class C, from 100 to 299 enrollment, first, Elsie, 24 points; second, Cass City, 23, and third, St. Louis, 18. Class D, less than 100 enrollment, first, Howard City, 17 points; second, New Baltimore, 16, and third, Richmond and Coleman, 15 points each.

Vocational subjects, class A, B, first, Alma, 33 points; second, Mt. Pleasant, 31, and third, Midland, 14. Class C, first, St. Louis, 38 points; second, East Jordan, 24, and third, Clare, 10.

Two contestants won the highest possible records, taking first place in each of two events. Allan Pierce of Flint won first places in physics and trigonometry and Margaret Nicholas of Midland took first in Latin nine and English ten. No pupil was permitted to enter more than two contests.

Winners from Grand Rapids were: Earl Goudzwaard, third place in civics, class A, B; Winifred Hagen, third place in French two; Ruth Gezon, first in typewriting one, and Herman Fles, second in typewriting one. All represented Grand Rapids Christian High school. Helen Sabin of Comstock Park took second place in typewriting two in class D.

Spring Hay Fever Caused by Tree Pollen

Although early spring hay fever is much less severe than that of the later part of the summer, it has received considerable attention since medical authorities have studied the causes.

Each climatic area has its own hay fever producing plants. Grasses, ragweeds and trees are the most common sources. The early spring type of hay fever coincides with the flowering of such trees as elm, oak, poplar, birch, maple, walnut and willow, which scatter enormous amounts of pollen.

Severe cases of hay fever have been caused by elms. Few cases have been attributed to the various species of poplar in the eastern states, but Arizona cottonwood is regarded as a frequent cause in southern Arizona and California, where it is common.

Mountain cedar is the only conifer that has been found of importance in causing hay fever. It is found principally in southern Texas and in New Mexico and is said to be the cause of winter hay fever in these regions, according to R. P. Wodehouse in Hygeia.

Walnuts of the east are not serious factors in hay fever, but the California black walnut is believed to produce the disease frequently. Oaks are similarly of little importance in the east, but the black oak of California, Texas, Arizona and New Mexico and the live oak and white oak of the same distribution are considered important in those regions.

NURSE'S SONG

When the voices of children are heard
On the green
And laughing is heard on the hill,
My heart is at rest within my breast,
And everything else is still.

"Then come home, my children,
The sun is gone down,
And the dews of the night arise;
Come, come leave off play,
And let us away
Till the morning appears in the skies."

"No, no, let us play, for it is yet day,
And we cannot go to sleep;
Besides in the sky the little birds fly,
And the hills are all covered with sheep."

"Well, well, go and play till the light
Fades away,
And then go home to bed."
The little ones leaped and shouted
And laughed;
And all the hills echoed.

Toads Hop in Vain

W. J. Coyle, manager of Seattle's new $3,000,000 auditorium, has decided not to plant horned toads in a cornerstone for a period of 35 years when appealed to by a humane society. Five toads, including the famous Methuselah, inset, were shipped from Fort Worth, Texas, by air mail for the test. Photo shows C. M. Perkins, left, Seattle postmaster, delivering the toads to Coyle, right, after the flight. Inset is of Janet Murdock Gow, four, one of a group of Seattle girls who protested against the plan of testing the longevity of the toads.

FARRELL BOOSTS OLD ATHLETES

Would the athletes of 15 and 20 years ago hold their own against the athletes of today under present day conditions? Certainly they would, in the opinion of Steve Farrell, varsity of Michigan, who has been training all sorts of athletes for more than 25 years.

Steve believes that the modern athlete has things too easy. Walking any distance is unthought of by the average star today, while years ago riding in street cars, cabs and busses was taboo with any aspiring college athlete. Coach Farrell admits, of course, that the increased dislike for using one's legs to travel between two given points is only the result of the attitude of college students as a body.

Training room attention, says the coach, was a thing unknown in years gone by. Shin splints, sore muscles and tendons and other ailments were just as common in those days, but were ignored, just because there was nothing one could do about it. Today, for the average athlete, the care of expert trainers and rubbers is considered as essential as good coaching.

If the average track man today, for instance, says Steve, were to be told how the track men used to train years ago, he would laugh. The "hard workout" which the present day track men fears would be considered only a preliminary warming up in those days. Any man who stayed out for the sport then did so because he liked it.

The aversion of the modern youth for stiff work is shown by the increasing proportion of candidates who select the shorter running distance events and shun the mile and two-mile runs. The latter require long workouts daily, and unless the candidate is a glutton for punishment, he drops from the squad or decides he'd make a better short-distance man.

Steve does not go so far as to say that the athlete of yesterday was any more plucky than the present athlete. He merely infers that their bodies were sturdier, because of more intensive training, and they were more valuable to any team as all-around athletes than the modern stars as specialists in one or two events.

To sum up, the coach feels that given the present advantages of scientific coaching and training, as well as improved tracks and other facilities, the athlete of the past would have little difficulty in outspurring, outjumping or outdistancing the average "star" of today.

Holland Woman Sees Herself Portrayed In Gotham Pageant

Mrs. Christine Van Raalte Gilmore, only living representative of the historic group led by her father, Dr. A. C. Van Raalte, which settled in Holland in 1847, took a leading part in the tercentenary pageant recently staged in Mecca Temple, New York City. Mrs. Gilmore, 82 years old, had the unusual experience of having looked back three-quarters of a century and having seen herself as Christine Van Raalte, acted by little Miss Alice Allen, and having heard herself ask her father whether she could be of any help to him.

Mrs. Gilmore spoke a few words at the close of the scene in Episode 9 and read the watchword of her father, and afterward gave an English translation.

Youth and Life

A Clearing House for Boys and Girls and Their Problems
By BOYD R. SWEM

THE QUESTION OF COLLEGE

Dear Boys and Girls: Are you going to college? That is a question which many of you are now facing, and many of your parents are greatly concerned about it, too.

And many of you who ought to be concerned about it are asleep to the fact that there is such a thing as college. You have heard of colleges but you never supposed they were meant for you. Wake up! You may be the very one who needs a college education more than anyone else in your community. Are you going to college?

Not for Everybody

Now, I don't mean that everyone should go to college. Nowadays we are hearing great educators say over and over again that many folks are in college who should not be there. And thousands of them are getting kicked out every year. No, they are not expelled; simply "advised" officially not to return because their school work is not satisfactory.

But that doesn't prove that you are the one who should stay home.

A Four-Year Loaf

But do you belong in college? That is a question worth thinking about.

"Dad, what is the meaning of 'college bred'?" runs a joke that is going the rounds. "My son, it is a four-year loaf," is the reply. Sometimes it is true.

Many a fond parent spends thousands of dollars upon son or daughter only to secure a positive injury rather than a benefit to his child.

Some Test Questions

Here, then, are three questions I wish you would ask yourself, to determine whether you are fitted for college:

1. Have you a real desire to improve—to be educated—not merely to know a lot of facts, but to be shown how to find facts, and how to interpret them when you have found them?

2. Have you sufficient ability, as shown by your past school record, to handle the kind of work that is offered in colleges? Almost all who do very poorly in high school fail in college. Very many who do just average work in high school can't make it. Those who do work above the average usually have little difficulty.

3. Have you financial resources (counting also your health, strength and ambition in the matter of earning your own way) which will enable you to pay for a college course?

If you can answer "yes" to all of them, it is your MORAL DUTY to go to college. Remember this: When millions are spent to provide higher education, it is next to criminal for anyone who can greatly profit by that kind of training not to use the costly facilities that are available. You might just as reasonably refuse to call out the fire department when your house is burning down.

If you fall in any two of these, most certainly you have no excuse for trying to get a college education. But if you fall down in just one of the three, there are a number of interesting suggestions that might be of value if there were space to print them.

If you want to send me the details of your case I shall be glad to give any helpful advice that I can, on these questions, or on any others that may be troubling you. Address to me at Creston Station, Grand Rapids, Michigan, enclosing a return envelope.

LIVING AND LOVING

By MRS. VIRGINIA LEE

SELFISH MOTHERS

A current play deals with a situation wherein a mother, who, in her own estimation, was the spirit of self-sacrifice, was, in reality, a monster of selfishness. Her two sons had no chance to live their own lives. All her thought was given to scheming to keep them with her and under her domination. In the case of the younger son she succeeded, breaking up his romance and making him wholly dependent upon her. Only the clear thinking and strong will of the older son's wife saved him from a similar fate. Of course this was an exaggerated case, but every mother there could see wherein she might err, and take warning.

Now here comes a letter from a young man suffering from this same over-mothering. In such case the silver cord that binds mother and child will inevitably snap sooner or later, unless she realizes her mistake and lets her children work out their own salvation.

"Dear Mrs. Lee: Please do not think I am a disloyal or ungrateful son. I am 19, and an only child. Mother and dad have been divorced since I was 6, so mother and I have been much together. Mother has done everything possible for me, but she will persist in fussing over me. Whenever I try on new clothes she stands over adjusting, pulling and straightening them. If I try to arrange my room she wants to help. It's too hard work for a little boy, she says. Mother always goes to the barber shop with me and instructs the barber just how to cut my hair. I have never yet picked out a necktie independent of mother, nor can I ever have more than 25 cents in money, although mother receives $200 a month from father. When I went to college she came over to the school and helped me pick out my studies. Then she interviewed all the teachers and told them to give me special consideration, as I wasn't well.

"Mrs. Lee, you can easily imagine my social standing at the school. I was called 'Sissy,' 'mamma's pet' and 'baby,' and I was unable to do anything in my own defense. After 12 weeks at college I went to the doctor, who told me I was suffering from a nervous breakdown, partially due to my mother fussing so about me. He advised me to quit school until next fall.

"Can't you advise me what to do? Mother would be heartbroken if anything were said to her. I can't bear to go back to school under such conditions. What can I do? I thank you for your friendly interest in us all. Yours respectfully,

"Jack."

I'm afraid you will have to hurt your mother's feeling, Jack. You must make her see that you are grown up and must take a man's place in the world. I wonder if the school doctor couldn't help you out by writing your mother and telling her that your nervous condition comes from too much coddling and that she must leave you alone for your own good. Then you must assert yourself and make her see that your school life will be ruined if she persists in her present course. I wish you could take her to see the play I speak of. But perhaps she would never think to apply it to herself, but merely think that there never was a mother so selfish as the one portrayed. Go in for boxing, swimming, fencing, rowing, all sorts of athletic things and get strong and take an independent stand and stick to it. You'll have to make the break sooner or later, and better make it at once. Write me again and let me know how you get along and if you need any backing.

The World and All

MORE IMPORTANT THINGS

Inhabitants of the United States are getting ready to vote for candidates for the presidency, and I have no doubt that this is a very important affair. The country is already getting excited about it, and men are making enemies of old friends by condemning all who do not agree with them in the choice of a man for the chief executive office.

And it will be next March before we have a new president!

However important the presidency may be, I think it is given plenty of attention by Americans. As for myself, I am going to think and talk about other things. There are plenty of talkers and writers to discuss the candidates and the issues (if any) with you and at you.

I wrote and lectured on political and semi-political subjects for years and years. I used to get excited about these things. I thought that the election of A would mean a nation's ruin, and that the election of B would put right upon the throne and wrong upon the scaffold.

Things I consider more important than the presidency: Mississippi flood relief, reforestation, development of inland waterways and coastal canals, a broad national highway from New York to California, and another one from Alaska to South America.

Development of systematic marketing by farmers, Lindbergh's next trip to Europe, airports for every town and mooring masts for dirigibles at first-class airports.

Conquest of cancer and the common cold, fireproof school buildings, a home chair that one may tip back on without damaging the rugs, abolition of dry sweeping in all public places, electrification of railroads, the Nicaragua Canal, the St. Lawrence Waterway, good English on the radio, elimination of railway grade crossings, a cheap method of killing potato bugs, and the teaching of modern languages to children under ten.

Are there any other things that are more important for discussion than the presidential candidates and the political issues? Let's see. Immortality and how to achieve it, worry and the avoidance of it, how to acquire merit, how to deserve and enjoy love, how to appreciate the parable of the Good Samaritan, how to treat a wife or a husband, how to answer the children's questions, what to wear, what to eat, how to escape a tornado, what to do with one's money if any, and what to say to the bill collector the third time.

Oh, I fancy we'll have no difficulty whatever finding interesting and important things to talk and write about between now and next March.

WEEK OF JUNE 10
General Farm Outlook—On the whole the week beginning June 10th promises to be favorable for farm work in most parts of Michigan. Precipitation generally will be moderate and scattered, leaving most of this period with little or no rain to speak of and temperatures close to the seasonal normal. These conditions will be good for planting corn, potatoes, sugar beets and beans. The germinating conditions this week will be much better than next week. To get the most good out of this combination, therefore, one should begin their work early in the week.

Weather for the Week—While there may be some unsettled and showery weather over many counties at the beginning of this week, we do not believe the precipitation will be severe nor plentiful.

Temperatures will be rising during early stages of the week and continue warm for the season throughout the greater part of this seven-day period. About the middle of the week storm elements will gather over the state, resulting in thunder showers and some local winds that may be rather severe in small sections.

Although the sky may clear between this storm period and the one expected in the state at the very end of this week, temperatures will continue warm. During Friday and Saturday many parts of Michigan will be visited with severe local storms of thunder, rain and wind. It is quite likely this storminess will run over into the early part of next week after which there will be a marked change to cooler.

The Potato Position—Much has been said regarding the expected heavy acreage of potatoes planned by the farmers for 1928. The Bureau of Agricultural Economics has this to say: "If the corn belt states have a summer as cool as 1924 we are likely to have a surplus of potatoes almost irrespective of the acreage planted."

Acid Stomach

"Phillips Milk of Magnesia"

Better than Soda

Hereafter, instead of soda take a little "Phillips Milk of Magnesia" in water any time for indigestion or sour, acid, gassy stomach, and relief will come instantly.

For fifty years genuine "Phillips Milk of Magnesia" has been prescribed by physicians because it overcomes three times as much acid in the stomach as a saturated solution of bicarbonate of soda, leaving the stomach sweet and free from all gases. It neutralizes acid fermentations in the bowels and gently urges the souring waste from the system without purging. Besides, it is more pleasant to take than soda. Insist upon "Phillips." Twenty-five cent and fifty cent bottles any drug store. "Milk of Magnesia" has been the U. S. Registered Trade Mark of The Charles H. Phillips Chemical Co. and its predecessor Charles H. Phillips since 1875.

How Much Water Should Baby Get?

A Famous Authority's Rule

By Ruth Brittain

Baby specialists agree nowadays, that during the first six months, babies must have three ounces of fluid per pound of body weight daily. An eight pound baby, for instance, needs twenty-four ounces of fluid. Later on the rule is two ounces of fluid per pound of body weight. The amount of fluid absorbed by a breast fed baby is best determined by weighing him before and after feeding for the whole day; and it is easily calculated for the bottle fed one. Then make up any deficiency with water.

Giving baby sufficient water often relieves his feverish, crying, upset and restless spells. If it doesn't, give him a few drops of Fletcher's Castoria. For these and other ills of babies and children such as colic, cholera, diarrhea, gas on stomach and bowels, constipation, sour stomach, loss of sleep, underweight, etc., leading physicians say there's nothing so effective. It is purely vegetable—the recipe is on the wrapper—and millions of mothers have depended on it in over thirty years of ever increasing use. It regulates baby's bowels, makes him sleep and eat right, enables him to get full nourishment from his food, so he increases in weight as he should. With each package you get a book on Motherhood worth its weight in gold.

Just a word of caution. Look for the signature of Chas. F. Fletcher on the package so you'll be sure to get the genuine. The forty cent bottles contain thirty-five doses.

The Outer Gate by Octavus Roy Cohen

1927, Central Press Ass'n., Inc.

"Oh, sure." Todd grinned bashfully. "You know how a girl like her would be, once she let herself fall in love."

"And she has this time?"
"Golly—yes. Not that I blame her. Fact is, Mr. Carmody, I'm awfully happy about it. You see, Bob Terry—I and him was buddies down yonder, and when he come out—"

"I understand," Carmody spoke with just the slightest suggestion of impatience. "I don't know the personal side of Kathleen, of course; but I can accept everything you say about her. And I'd hate to see her get hurt."
"Hurt? Her? By who?"
"Bob Terry!"

Todd shook his head disbelievingly. "Tain't possible, Mr. Carmody. Them two kids—"
Carmody's voice crackled. "Just the same, Todd, unless I'm all wrong, Terry is becoming very seriously interested in Miss Lois Borden!"
"Good Lord!" Shannon leaned forward tensely. "You don't really mean that? Why, it'd kill Kathleen, and—"
"That's all, Todd. Think it over."
"But Mr. Carmody—"
"I'll talk to you about it some other time. I'm busy now."

CHAPTER XXIX

He turned back to his work, apparently having forgotten Shannon's presence. The big man looked at him uncertainly, but he could not mistake the gesture of dismissal. He rose, stared, and then shuffled from the room.

He did not pass through Kathleen's office on the way out. Whispering Willie Weaver saw him and nodded, but Todd did not even return the greeting of the big, bald-headed man. He made his way to the elevator, was dropped to the ground floor, and then moved slowly and heavily to the little municipal park which jeweled the center of the city. There, on a harsh, uncomfortable bench, Todd Shannon lighted his pipe and set himself to the very unusual and painful labor of thinking.

It did not occur to his simple, trusting mind that there could have been any ulterior motive actuating John Carmody. And never would he have suspected that Carmody was insanely jealous of Kathleen's love for Bob Terry.

Shannon did not think of Carmody in that way; he saw the hatchet-faced attorney only as a brain, as a great driving power in whose life there was not time for, or thought of, women. Besides, Carmody was married—and that in itself precluded all possibility of anything between himself and Kathleen.

Carmody had worked with Machiavellian cleverness. He virtually had turned his problem over to this convict who loved both Terry and Kathleen. He counted on the fact that Todd would certainly blunder, and in blundering, help Carmoly with Kathleen.

For one thing, it was certain that Todd, in his lumbering way, would talk to both Kathleen and Bob. That, in itself, would help. Carmody was not sure that each recognized the situation. In case that were true, he wished Kathleen to become jealous, and he wished Terry to be made aware of the possibility of a marriage with Lois Borden. He figured that such a prospect would dazzle the young man whose world had been turned topsyturvy and then upside down again. He planned to bewilder Terry and to dazzle him, while all the time he, himself, could sit back and watch the counterplay. Eliminate Terry definitely from Kathleen's life, and Carmody knew that she would turn to someone for sympathy and understanding. Perhaps the inevitable and bitter reaction might send her to his hungry and lecherous arms. Perhaps—John Carmody was well satisfied. He had worked cleverly, and there was one other bludgeon of disaster which was nearly ready for the wielding. Nothing mattered to him—life or happiness or justice—provided he attained his ends. It was his tendon of Achilles, this weakness for women which had centered flamingly on Kathleen Shannon.

And Todd Shannon was doing precisely what Carmody had known he would do. He was wrestling with a problem which was too big for him. It was troublesome and it was subtle. Shannon wasn't the sort of a man who could reduce a thing to its elements. He couldn't think silently. He felt the need for talk.

But one thing stood out with vivid clarity; Carmody was speaking the truth, and disaster was imminent. Todd had been very happy since coming from the penitentiary. He felt like a man who had returned to his children. He had experienced his moment of great happiness when they told him of their engagement. And because he was Todd Shannon, he accepted their message as a certainty—until this moment.

He dreaded the effect on Kathleen should Bob permit himself to fall in love with Lois. He didn't know what he was going to do, but he unconsciously had hit upon the single element in the situation which would tend to make marriage between Lois and Bob Terry impossible.

"Seems like to me," Todd told himself, "that if Bob was ever going to slough Peter Borden, like he has sworn he's gonna do, it would get Miss Borden sore at him. And if he didn't marry her—he'd be bound to marry Kathleen." He nodded in slow satisfaction. "Yep! Seems like it'd be a good thing for Bob to remember that he hates Borden." *

The opportunity which Todd sought did not at once present itself. During working hours Bob seemed busy. At night he either went out with Kathleen or failed to appear at the Shannon rooms.

There was no doubting the fact that a change was being effected in the lad. The shoulders were squarer, the stride more firm and less rhythmic; occasionally he looked casual passers-by in the eye with a hint of belligerence. Freedom was affecting him as certainly as prison had done.

Todd was not a keen observer, but he was thorough. He saw one detail at a time, and gradually pieced the bits together into a worrisome whole.

For one thing, he saw that Kathleen was unhappy. When with Bob, she was her old self. "Even more so," reflected Todd, as he glimpsed her, almost hysterical delight. But on the nights when Bob did not appear Kathleen sat with folded hands. Occasionally she pretended to read, but Todd noticed that no pages were turned. There was a brooding light in her deep black eyes. Once he spoke with her.

"What's eating on you, Kathleen?"
"Nothing, Uncle Todd."
"Aw! Come now—"
"Really. I mean that."
"Bob?" he queried bluntly. She flashed him a startled glance.

"What made you ask that?"
"Oh! Nothin'."
"Something did." She was keyed to a high nervous tension. "What have you noticed?"

"About the kid? Well, he's kinder perkin' up a bit. And by the same token—he's gettin' soft."
"In what way?"
"Gosh! Kathleen—I don't know. I never was no hand to understand a lot about people. Tain't what way; it's how he shows it. Take Peter Borden, for instance; Bob didn't used to think of nothin' but gettin' even with him. Now, he ain't so keen about it."

"I argued him away from that." Her voice was suddenly colorless. "All hell couldn't have argued him out of it, the way he felt the day they let him out."
"Things are different." She swept him with her eyes. "You haven't thought anything else?"
"Well, yes. Kind of."
"What?"
"Ain't no use worryin' you."
"Tell me!" She stamped her foot impatiently.

"If you ain't noticed—Maybe you have, though."
"What?"
"Bob ain't by any chance gettin' too sweet on Miss Borden, is he?"
"What makes you think he is?"
"Now listen, Kathleen—I didn't say nothin' like that. I said 'Was he.' It'd be darned fortunate if he did."
"Why?"

"She ain't his type. Specially now. There ain't no gittin' around the fact that Bob has been three years in the pen, and I happen to know something about what those three years were. I was there—every day—with him. Maybe if he hadn't ever gone, he could have fitted into her life, but there's somethin' put into a man when he's been a convict that don't ever come out."

"If she loved him, they'd be happy."
"No, they wouldn't. That's all rot." He looked closely at Kathleen. "Why don't you up and marry the lad, Kathleen. You're the girl for him—not Miss Borden."

"I'm not for him if he don't want me. And I'd never try to sweep him from his feet."

"Aw, hell!" Todd was frankly disgusted. "Women in love gimme a pain. Even you."

He was clumsily clever enough to dissemble, but he took Kathleen's worries on his own shoulders with the result that two evenings later he went walking with Bob Terry.

They strolled through the city park, the lumbering, gigantic figure of Todd Shannon and the smaller one of Bob Terry. Bob was curious. He feared that Todd was in trouble; the big man's eyes were filled with a light which Bob did not like, and he feared that Todd had succumbed to an innate weakness and was afraid of the police.

And so, when Todd broached the subject with elephantine candor, Bob was relieved.
"Gettin' your feet on the ground, ain't you, Kid?"
"Why, yes—"
"Happy?"
"Rather. But you didn't bring me out to talk about myself, did you?"
"Sure."
"Gosh! I was afraid—"
"Of me? Lad! I hope I never see another jail except from the outside. It ain't that I'm naturally honest or anything—but prisons git darned tiresome."

CHAPTER XXX

Bob laughed softly. "I'm all right, Todd. What makes you think I'm not?"
"Didn't say I thought so. I just wondered."
"Why?"
"Well, bein' your buddy—an' havin' known you pretty good down yonder, I wondered what was brewin'." Seems like we ain't had a good heart-to-heart talk for a thunderin' long time. Just sort of wanted to know how things stood."
"I'm here. Ask me."
"We-e-l, first of all—you don't hate Peter Borden like you did."
The lad's face purpled in the darkness. His voice was quiet—and convincing. "I loathe him! That hatred is part of me. I don't think I'll ever get over it."
Todd felt an exaltation. "But you ain't aimin' to do him no harm, are you?"

"What can I do? I was willing to steal from him—but what's the use, when he'll give me anything I want? It would be rotten to beat him up; he's an old man, and just fool enough to take it without whining. And then—" Bob closed his lips sharply.

"Then—what?"
"Lois has been very nice to me. I've got to consider her."
"Sure you do, son. Sure you do. That's what I wanted to find out. Point is, if you had a good square chance to even things up with Borden, would you do it—or would you let your friendship for his daughter prevent?"

Bob did not immediately answer. He had threshed out the question a thousand times, and never to his own satisfaction.

"I think," he said slowly, "that I'd do it. I'd like to see that man suffer. God knows I would. But there isn't no way—"

"Reckon there ain't. But let's talk of something else. Golly, boy! It's been a long time since we spilled a real lot of words to each other. How you gittin' along at the office?"
"Fine. Al Gregory says I'm good. Wants me to start reading law."

"Why not?"
"I think I shall. But I don't like Gregory."
"They say he'll be governor some day."

"I know. But he's crooked as a snake. Just like a snake. Carmody is crooked, too; but every body knows it—and he laughs 'em down and dares 'em to come after him. Al Gregory is mushy-mouthed and scary. He won't take his chances in the open. Between you and me, I think a damned sight more of the yeggs and stick-up men I talk to every day than I do of that golden-haired, big-voiced, cheap politician."

"You'd rather see a man be an honest crook, eh?"
"Yes. Do his stuff and take his chances. But not hide behind some one else."

They talked of things in general, Todd studiously avoiding any reference to Kathleen. He was afraid that he might blunder.

It was late when they separated. Todd's brain was more active than it had been in years. He sensed things that he had not yet analyzed, and one of them was that if the day of Bob's revenge on Peter Borden was delayed too long—it would never come. Bob talked loudly of his hatred, but he was undeniably softening.

Todd Shannon loved the boy. He loved Kathleen even more. And in his simple, heavy way, he believed that they would be happy with each other. It behooved him, therefore, to do what he could to remove all possibility of a marriage between Terry and Lois Borden. And the surest method of achieving that end would be to help Bob crush Peter Borden. Todd knew that Lois would never forgive.

The following morning he was standing in the lobby of the big office building when the immaculate little figure of John Carmody shoved through the door. Todd stepped forward.

"Just a minute, Mr. Carmody."
"Yes, Shannon; what is it?"
"I waited down here for you—didn't want Kathleen to see us talkin'. Might want to know what about." He cleared his throat. "Remember what we were discussin' the other day?"

Carmody appeared bewildered. "What?"
"Bob Terry and old man Borden."
"Oh, that? Yes, indeed."
"I been doin' a heap of thinkin', Mr. Carmody. And I've kind of decided this way: If things slide very long, Bob ain't gonna want to slough that bimbo. He's gettin' soft. Dunno why—but there's some reason. Right now he's ready. It seems like if you could think of something, something that ain't gonna get Bob into no jam. You know—you're clever. Somethin' that'll make old Borden squirm. You do that, and I'll see to it that Bob does what you advise. That is, if it ain't put off too long. How about it?"

"We—all—" Carmody, inwardly exultant, seemed undecided. "It sounds like a very good idea. I'll see what I can find out. You'll hear from me—perhaps."

And on the way up in the elevator, Carmody's thin lips expanded. "Things are dovetailin'," he told himself. "A great deal better than that monstrous idiot suspects."

Bob Terry was dazed. All evening he had chatted with Lois Borden about nothing in particular, yet all evening he had been conscious of a tense undercurrent.
Lois Borden was in love with him. Humble and modest as he was, there was no escaping that fact once his eyes had been opened to the possibility. And Bob was merely human.

A man is in a difficult position when he realizes that a girl—young, beautiful and possessed of all that makes life worth while—is in love with him. He is naturally flattered and instinctively responsive.

But Bob tried to be loyal to Kathleen in his thoughts. All evening long he had been telling himself doggedly that Kathleen was his type and Lois was not. He reminded himself time and again that he was pledged to Kathleen. Yet every so often his eyes would wander to the slim, golden creature at his side and his heart would quicken with the knowledge that she was his for the asking.

His emotions were natural. Perhaps, under other circumstances, his mind might not have wandered from Kathleen. But first from one source, and then from another, had come assurances that this exquisite girl was offering herself to him. The old halo had returned to romanticize her—with this difference: that now she was obtainable, whereas before she had been a distant star to be worshipped impersonally.

He didn't know his own feelings. He wondered whether he cared for Lois or whether he was merely dazzled. Things had happened too quickly for Bob. During his three years of torture in the state penitentiary he had learned to think slowly. There were so pitifully few things happening in a penitentiary which required quick thinking: the daily grind in the mills—the clackety-clack of the shuttles, day in and day out; the spinning of cotton and the manufacture of cotton shirts; the heavy, stolid, good natured company of Todd Shannon; the sulky, subdued companionship of convicted criminals—

All through the evening Bob and Lois had talked in generalities. Nothing of particular importance had been said, yet each was conscious that they had skirted the pool of the personal. And each knew that the other knew it. Kathleen hovered always in the background—big black eyes filled with quiet reproach. The entrance of Peter Borden was a relief.

Borden was nervous. Under his arm he carried a brief case. He nodded to Bob and went immediately in the library, where he opened the brief case and spread out on the table a sheaf of papers liberally covered with figures. There was something else in the brief case—an unpretentious packet which Borden took to the wall safe.

Then he went back to his figures again, after spinning the antiquated dial of the safe.

It was Saturday night: a night when all the city was downtown on pelasure bent. Moving picture theaters were doing a land office business, the vaudeville houses were crammed, the edifice which housed the city's stock company did not have a vacant seat. Out at the river, the amusement park, recently opened, was jammed with revelers who shouted with glee as they plunged the dips of the roller coaster or came near breaking their backs on other riding devices.

But on this Saturday night a man and a girl sat together and talked of nothing—meaning much; an elderly man studied the tabulations of a business report and worried about the future—[I] in her lonely room another girl brooded by the window and wondered—and wondered.

Lois' eyes sought the stern, set face of her father. Borden had not been himself recently. He was reserved and preoccupied. She knew that things had not been going well at the plant. There had been frequent meetings of the board of directors, and more than one clash between her father and Jonas Merriwether. She made an excuse and went to him, running her long, slender fingers through his thinning hair.

"Don't you ever rest, Dad?"
He smiled wanly.

"Not just now, girl."
"But you should. That horrid plant! Don't you know that Monday is Labor Day—and everybody is forgetting work until Tuesday?"

Borden sighed. "That's the advantage of being a simple laborer."
"But surely you're not going to sit up again tonight until 2 o'clock?"
"No. I promise."

Mint Oil Prices May Advance; Crop Nipped

Prospects of mint oil prices being considerably higher this season than last were foreseen by Berrien county growers as a consequence of severe frost damage to the crop. The oil sold for $3 a pound last year. From 25 to 50 per cent of the acreage has been destroyed by heaving, growers report. Much of it will be replanted, according to present indications.

Dr. Caldwell's 3 Rules

Keep You Healthy

Dr. Caldwell watched the results of constipation for 47 years, and believed that no matter how careful people are of their health, diet and exercise, constipation will occur from time to time regardless of how much one tries to avoid it. Of next importance, then, is how to treat it when it comes. Dr. Caldwell always was in favor of getting as close to nature as possible, hence his remedy for constipation, known as Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, is a mild vegetable compound. It can not harm the most delicate system and is not a habit forming preparation. Syrup Pepsin is pleasant-tasting, and youngsters love it. It does not gripe. Thousands of mothers have written us to that effect.

Dr. Caldwell did not approve of drastic physics and purges. He did not believe they were good for human beings to put into their system. In a practice of 47 years he never saw any reason for their use when a medicine like Syrup Pepsin will empty the bowels just as promptly, more cleanly and gently, without griping and harm to the system.

Keep free from constipation! It robs your strength, hardens your arteries and brings on premature old age. Do not let a day go by without a bowel movement. Do not sit and get hope, but go to a druggist and get one of the generous bottles of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. Take the proper dose that night and by morning you will feel like a different person. Use Syrup Pepsin for yourself and members of the family in constipation, biliousness, sour and crampy stomach, bad breath, no appetite, headaches, and to break up fevers and colds. Always have a bottle in the house, and observe these three rules of health: Keep the head cool, the feet warm, the bowels open.

We would be glad to have you prove at our expense how much Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin can mean to you and yours. Just write "Syrup Pepsin," Monticello, Illinois, and we will send you prepaid a FREE SAMPLE BOTTLE.

McDougal-Cook

The home of Mr. and Mrs. John Cook, 1016 South Burdick street, was the scene of a pretty wedding Saturday afternoon, when their daughter, Dorothy Virginia, became the bride of Clair McDougal. The Rev. J. W. Dunning performed the ceremony in the presence of 30 guests. The house was attractively decorated with palms, ferns, and spring flowers. The bride wore a becoming peach-shaded satin dress, and carried a bouquet of bride's roses and swansonias. She was attended by Mrs. Glenn Cook, who wore green georgette, and carried roses. Phillip Cook served Mr. McDougal as best man. The wedding march was played by Cornelius Abrams, and Mrs. Abrams sang, "Oh Promise Me." The bride walked to improvised altar on the arm of her father, and she was preceded by two flower girls, Genadine Cook and Phyllis Raymond. A wedding dinner at the Columbia hotel followed the services and Mr. and Mrs. McDougal left on a honeymoon trip to Niagara Falls. Clair is a Gobles graduate who has a very desirable position with Gilmore Bros., Kalamazoo. The News joins with their many friends in best wishes.

We are very anxious to improve the quality of the potatoes in the vicinity of Bloomingdale, Gobles and Kendall; therefore have purchased a carload of Certified White Rurals from Cadillac potato growers, to be distributed at cost, namely:

$3.75 per 2 1/2 bushel bag

This should greatly improve the quality of the potatoes if properly treated with Formaldehyde or Semason.

Semason is a preparation more simple to use and recommended by the State Experiment Stations. One pound can sell for $1.05 and will treat 20 bushel. If you want to boost your home town, raise better potatoes by planting better seed.

The price we pay for potatoes will be governed largely by the quality.

You surely can't afford to plant common seed when you can buy certified at $1.50 per bushel.
