The afternoon was pleasantly spent with music, readings, etc. Miss Frances Huff, a classmate of the bride, gave a very delightful description of her recent trip abroad. Josephine Myers

Josephine Barton Myers was born at Bridgewater, near Saline, Washenaw county, Michigan, on the 19th day of April, 1850 and passed on at 7:30 a. m. at Gobles, Michigan on the 28th day of August, 1928.
When nine weeks old she with her parents, William Barton and Charity Stevens Barton moved to Van Buren county, Michigan and settled in Almena township on a farm on what was then known as Breed street, where she passed her childhood days.
She attended the Armstrong district school and after completing the course there attended the Mt. Holyoke seminary for girls located at Kalamazoo, completing the course there.
At the age of 17 years she started teaching in the district schools and continued teaching in the district and public schools for eighteen years or until failing health forced her to quit.
She had the reputation of being an excellent teacher and numbers of her pupils attribute a great part of their success in life to the early training they received from her.
She was a charter member of the Woman's Fortnightly Club, where her clear thinking, originality and executive ability made her invaluable.
She was a member of the Eastern Star lodge. A member of Hazel Dell Rebekah Lodge and held the office of financial secretary of said lodge for 25 years.
She was at one time honored by the Grand Lodge of the Rebekahs of Michigan by being elected to the office of Grand Chaplain, which she held with distinction.
On December 25, 1876 she was united in marriage to Calvin D. Myers under the Christmas tree at Covey Hill, together with two other couples: Rev. Charles Myers and Agnes Brown and Jonathan Young and Eva Simmons.
Calvin D. Myers and his wife, Josephine lived the first years of their married life on their farm west of Brandywine corners.
She was a member of the Covey Hill Baptist church until the time she moved to Gobleville and she then affiliated with the Gobles Baptist church.
Three children were born to her; two, Gracie and Fern, dying in infancy.
She leaves to mourn her loss: one daughter, Nina F. McElheny, one niece, Mrs. Elmer Aseltine of Paw Paw, two grandchildren, Mrs. Cecil Reynolds of Lansing and Louise McElheny of Gobles; two great grandchildren, Jacqueline and Charles Reynolds and a host of other relatives and friends.

KILL QUACK GRASS WITH BEST SPRAY

Farmers everywhere will be interested in the following article on quack grass, which is put out by the Farm Bureau News:

Thinking of spraying quack grass with an inexpensive spray and no more quack! We have just seen some experiments that look just like that. Quack Grass is a big problem in Michigan and is getting to be more of a problem right along. The Michigan State College Farm Crops Department has worked out some good control measures for quack and is still studying the problem.

Professor C. R. Megee of the farm crops department is experimenting on a method for killing quack by spraying, so the editor of the News went out recently to have a look at it. Professor Megee took us out to the quack grass plot along a fence row and there we saw sections of full growth vigorous quack, here definite sections of squally matured quack but dead brown in color, and there a rectangular section of ground free of quack and bare.

The answer was spray. The bare ground once sported a growth of quack as thick as any section of the plot, but this spring when it was well started Professor Megee sprayed the leaves and stems with a solution of sodium chlorate, made up of one pound of the chemical to one gallon of water and applied at the rate of about 100 gallons to the acre. Two sprays three weeks apart finished the quack. The dead brown adult quack got its first spray about three weeks ago and is due for another. Two sprays about three weeks apart appear to kill the quack, above ground and below.

The chemical affects the quack grass so that it can't manufacture food, and a process of starvation sets in. Little difference is noted in the appearance of the quack for a few days, then a wilt sets in and the plants start going down. That process goes on about three weeks. Then a second application is made to finish the old growth and kill any new shoots.

The leaves and stems of the quack get dry and brittle and the white tough roots blacken and rot under this treatment.

Professor Megee started his experiment this spring and there's quite a lot of things he wants to find out about it yet. For the present two applications of that spray appears to kill quack. The spray method is a convenient way to get quack along fence rows and other tight places, and to get it where it appears in spots. Mr. Megee applied the test plot spray with an ordinary three-gallon hand sprayer. In a field choked with quack he used a potato sprayer and left a wide path of dead quack across the field.

The practice on the plots has been to thoroughly spray the leaves and stems but not to get any more on the ground than can be helped. The spray stops the growth of vegetation that season, but the chemical is so very soluble that Mr. Megee is of the opinion that quack spray applied one spring will be washed away by the next spring. This is a matter that is being checked. College sheep have been grazing right along in a field that had a strip of quack treatment, and without ill effects.

Sodium chlorate is not an agricultural chemical and is not stocked by local dealers. Its principal use is in textile manufacturing. Firms manufacturing sodium chlorate put it up in 112-pound drums and sell it at about 8 cents a pound. Where it can be had from wholesale druggists it usually costs from 20 to 30 cents a pound in small lots. Any farmer or group of farmers interested in trying this quack spray can secure the names of companies making sodium chlorate from their county agricultural agent or the farm crops department at the State College.

More work is to be done on spray control of quack and other college methods for quack control on a 15-acre field recently taken over by the college. This field is solid quack, and has been for a long time. It is soon to be laid out in strips and become a quack grass laboratory. Various experiments will be tried in spring and fall plowing of quack, the effect of various tillage tools, spraying at different times, with different strength sprays, etc.

One 500-Lb. Cow Is Worth Dozen Cows Of 100 Pounds Each

Analysis of more than 100,000 yearly individual records for cows on test in dairy herd improvement associations indicates that, on the average, cows that produced 100 pounds of butterfat a year returned $14 each over cost of feed; those that produced 200 pounds, $54 over cost of feed; 300 pounds, $96; 400 pounds, $138, and 500-pound cows returned $178 over cost of feed.

Thus the man milking a 500-pound producer would have more return than if he milked a dozen 100-pound cows, and this would take no account of the added labor of milking and caring for the larger herd or of the much greater expense of providing stable room for the herd instead of a single animal. The figures from returns are based on farm prices from all parts of the country, including whole-milk districts.

Large Quantities Of Milk Are Now Sold Co-operatively

Such data as are available indicate that the quantity of fluid milk handled by co-operative associations has been increasing rapidly during the last three to five years. Reports collected by the United States Department of Agriculture for 1924 and 1927 show a substantial increase in quantity for the latter year as compared to the former.

Approximately 11,000,000,000 pounds of fluid milk was marketed through co-operative associations in 1927. This quantity is nearly one-fifth of the estimated quantity used in continental United States for household purposes last year.

A large fraction of the total fluid milk used in some of the larger cities passes through co-operative channels in moving from the producers to the consumers. Such is the case in Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington, New York City, Hartford, Boston, Pittsburgh, Cleveland, Cincinnati, Detroit, Minneapolis, and other cities.

There are three general types of co-operative enterprises engaged in marketing fluid milk. These are the producers' bargaining association, the producers' distributing association, and the consumers' distributing association. The bargaining association functions chiefly in the determination of the monthly price to be paid by private distributors to the producers. About 60 per cent of the fluid milk marketed co-operatively is under the control of the bargaining associations. It is this type of association which operates in the larger cities.

The producer-operated distributing association assembles, processes, and delivers milk to consumers, such as hotels, restaurant, and private families. About 40 per cent of the milk marketed co-operatively is handled by this kind of producers' organization. In general these distributing associations operate in the small cities, although there are producers' associations distributing milk at retail in a few of the very large cities.

At the present time there is but one outstanding consumers' co-operative for handling fluid milk. This is an association serving the residents of Minneapolis. The enterprise buys its supply of milk from a producers' association, puts it in bottles, and distributes it to the homes of its members and others.

A Remarkable Showing

The state dairy herds at Michigan institutions are affording an object lesson to the world of efficient milk production.

The 26 cows at Ionia hospital led the way with an average milk production in May of 1,561 pounds. The 29 cows at Marquette prison were fourth in the list of institutions, with production of 1,385 pounds per cow. Newberry is tenth with 1,028 pounds per cow.

The average per cow for the entire list of state prisons, hospitals, etc., was 1,236 pounds, and the total milk production was just under one million pounds for the month.

There are 769 cows, all Holsteins, in the Michigan state herds. Considered as a total, they comprise the largest and finest Holstein herd in the world, one of which the state is justly proud.

Chick Season on Par With Others

The chick shipment season is nearing its close and, as in previous years, millions of chicks have found their way to all parts of the country. Hatchery men compare the season's output on a par with average years and the losses sustained on shipments were kept to a minimum.

The bulk of the shipments were made by parcel post through the post-offices at Holland and Zeeland. These cities maintain more than 100 hatcheries. The season opened in the winter months, the earliest on record.

A large percentage of the boxes were sent "special handling" through the mails and the railroad company provided special cars on certain days of the week, when shipments were heaviest.

Dogs Kill Seven More Sheep in Allegan Raid

Dogs recently killed seven sheep on the Frank Kitson farm, three and one-half miles north of Allegan. Kitson had a flock of 70 Shropshires. This was the second time dogs have invaded his flock. The first time a bulldog was found and killed.

Only a few nights before dogs killed several sheep of Bernard Stegeman on an adjoining farm. Sheriff Ben Lugten and his deputies are investigating.

No Corn Borer Found In Montcalm County

WHAT ABOUT THE LATE HATCHER DUCKLINGS

A number of our subscribers who are interested in duck breeding and raising have asked the question, "Are summer and early fall hatched ducklings profitable?" The late hatched ducklings have a number of advantages over their earlier hatched brothers and sisters.

In the first place, the summer and early fall hatched ducklings, if pushed for rapid and cheap gains, will go on the late fall and early winter markets in time for the Jewish and Christian holidays. They are naturally very profitable, for at this time the highest prices can be realized and in addition, the weather during the growing season of late hatched ducks is more favorable for rapid growth.

Another advantage of the late hatched duckling is found in the matter of shipping the ducks to market. In the cool weather of fall the shrinkage and mortality losses in shipping are greatly reduced and the cost of shipping is materially lowered by placing more birds to a coop than could be done during hot weather.

Of course, not all of the advantages are in favor of the late hatched duckling. In the first place, ducklings or duck eggs usually can be secured at less cost earlier in the season. Then for breeding purposes, the earlier hatched ducks have some advantage in that matings can be made earlier and laying will start sooner, thus giving a longer period of production. For one who wishes to raise and feed ducks for market purposes, however, the possibilities in late hatched ducklings should not be overlooked.

CHICKEN PRODUCTION DECLINES 10 PER CENT LESS THAN IN 1927

The number of chickens being raised on farms in 1928 is about 10 per cent less than in 1927, according to returns received by the Department of Agriculture covering approximately 22,000 flocks, representing all states. The returns showed the number of chicks and young chickens of this year's hatch in these farm flocks on July 1 to be 9 per cent less than on July, last year. Returns for June 1 showed 12 per cent less, for May 1, 15 per cent less, and for April 1, 16 per cent less, than on the same dates last year.

The reduction in the North Central states, which has more than half of the chickens in the United States, is about 7 per cent. The southern states show about a 11 per cent reduction, the northeast, 12 per cent, and the west about 5 per cent. Nebraska and Kansas are the only states of large production that do not show a decrease, the number of young birds there on July 1, being about the same as a year ago.

The reduction is not unexpected in view of the somewhat unfavorable relation between the prices of poultry products and the cost of the poultry ration that existed during most of 1927 and the first half of 1928.

MORE MANAGEMENT HINTS FOR THE GROWING PULLETS

Growing pullets need close attention during the summer in order to develop into good layers, says P. H. Gooding of the poultry extension staff of Purdue University.

"The ideal pullet is one that is free from disease and parasites; carries enough vigor, reserve weight, maturity and breeding to maintain continuous high production of marketable eggs throughout the year," said Mr. Gooding. "These specifications are adequate for securing the best birds possible for the flock which will produce a flock average that would make any poultryman feel good."

"To produce high quality pullets, brooding and summer care need special consideration. Any method of rearing that produces pullets that are most profitable on the home plant is the one to follow. Setbacks caused by chilling or overheating in the brooder, piling up or crowding, infestations of mites and lice, internal parasites or disease are likely to reduce the annual lay of the pullet even though the difficulty was corrected and no evident ill effects noticed.

The best practice in handling summer feeding seems to be to feed moderately a good growing mash and plenty of wholesome grains; to provide a clean range supplied with shade and green feed and let the pullet develop normally. A ration for growing pullets that has given good results at Purdue consists of 15 pounds each of ground yellow corn, wheat middlings, wheat bran and five pounds of meat scraps, with yellow corn hopper fed. It might be that the pullets will eat more corn than mash when fed this way. If such is the case the corn should be hand fed so that the pullets will consume about the same amount of corn as they do mash.

Excellent Season For Transplanting

This season has been ideal for planting pine and spruce seedlings and fruit trees and plants from the nurseries. In many instances these trees have made more new growth to date than they ordinarily would make in two average seasons.

The mortality rate among pine and spruce seedlings sometimes is excessive, especially in seasons of light rainfall, but there was plenty of moisture last spring to give all plantings a good start. Every seedling has grown in some forest plantings.

Charlevoix Schools Receive State Aid

According to figures submitted by County School Commissioner William C. Palmer of Charlevoix, schools of that county received 13.6 per cent, or one-eighth of the $25,000 state appropriation for the aid of one-room schools. Out of 21 applications, 17 schools received $200 each, or a total of $3,400 for Charlevoix county.

Mr. Palmer said it was a surprise to state officials to learn that so many Charlevoix county schools were entitled to aid.

Poems That Live

ALADDIN

When I was a beggarly boy,
And lived in a cellar damp,
I had not a friend nor a toy,
But I had Aladdin's lamp;
When I could not sleep for the cold,
I had fire enough in my brain,
And builded with roofs of gold
My beautiful castles in Spain!

Since then I have toiled day and night,
I have money and power good store,
But I'd give all my lamps of silver bright

For the one that is mine no more;
Take, Fortune, whatever you choose—
You gave and may snatch again;
I have nothing 'twould pain me to lose,
For I own no more castles in Spain!
—James Russell Lowell.

PLAN LAW FOR PROTECTION OF BEAUTY SPOTS

A projected model state license law to regulate outdoor advertising, designed to protect residence sections of cities and scenic spots in country regions against billboard and poster defacement, is now being worked out by joint committees representing the National Association of Real Estate Boards and the Outdoor Advertising Association of America.

The National Association of Real Estate Boards in a resolution adopted at its annual convention held in Detroit in 1925 put itself on record as calling for some form of legislative action which, while conserving the legitimate use of billboards in advertising, would prevent the loss entailed to the community through offensive use littering residence sections and scenic highways.

The natural beauty of the country is a public heritage, and the community has a right to keep possession and establish regulations which would preserve its aesthetic values, the Association holds. The use of signboards where they are out of place destroys real estate values as well as aesthetic value, it points out.

HOUSEHOLD HINTS

- Baked Pot Roast with Vegetables
- Endive Salad
- Brown Bread and Butter
- Sliced Peaches Milk
- Baked Pot Roast with vegetables is hearty, so I am advocating a simple salad and a fruit dessert. You may serve the peaches with cream and add graham crackers or simple cookies or wafers, if you wish. And some may prefer coffee as a finisher for such a meal. Add potatoes to the meat dish during the last three-quarters of an hour and let them cook until tender.

Today's Recipes

Baked Pot Roast with Vegetables—Four pounds beef (tough cut may be used), one-third cup flour, fat from meat or other fat (about one-fourth cup), two cups carrots, cut in pieces, two cups sliced onions, two cups celery, cut in pieces, one cup tomatoes, three sprigs parsley, one tablespoon salt, pepper to taste, three tablespoons cold water. Wash the meat. Sprinkle the one-third cup flour over it. In a frying pan, placed on the surface burner, brown the floured meat in the fat. Place a rack in a pan or kettle. On top of the rack place the meat. Put the carrots, onions, celery, tomatoes and parsley around the meat. Add the salt and pepper. Cover the pan or kettle. Bake in a slow oven at 250 degrees for five hours. Remove the meat and vegetables to a hot platter. Mix the three tablespoons of flour and cold water. Stir the mixture into the hot meat broth. Continue stirring and cook on the surface burner for at least five minutes. Serve hot with the meat and vegetables.

Suggestions

Ways and Means—As a guide in becoming acquainted with the red muscle meats that are good for every one for occasional meals, and particularly good for those suffering from any form of anemia, here is a table giving different ways in which such meats may be cooked:

Liver from beef, veal, pork or lamb—Sautéed, baked, breaded, pot roast, loaf, braised, creamed, croquettes, salad, en casserole.

Kidneys from beef, veal, pork or lamb—Broiled, stewed, fried, croquettes, grilled, sautéed, in meat pies, boiled, barbecued, braised, creamed, en casserole or omelet.

Sweetbreads from veal, lamb or pork—Creamed, boiled, curried, braised, sautéed, fried, baked, broiled, au gratin, in salad or fritters.

Brains of veal, pork or lamb—Creamed, scrambled, fried, sautéed, boiled or en omelet.

Heart of beef, pork, veal or lamb—Stuffed, braised, stewed, smothered with bacon, corned, pickled, smoked or en casserole.

Dutch Apple Cake

One pint flour, one teaspoon salt, four teaspoons baking powder, one-fourth cup butter, one egg, one scant cup milk, four tablespoons sugar, sour apples. Mix dry ingredients in order given, cut in fat, add milk to the beaten egg and stir into the dry mixture. Spread one-half inch thick on shallow baking pan. Pare apples and cut in sections. Lay in parallel rows on top of the dough with the sharp edge down. Sprinkle with a mixture of sugar and cinnamon, using two tablespoons sugar and one-fourth teaspoon cinnamon. Bake in a hot oven about 30 minutes. Serve with lemon sauce.

Conference Makes Its Appointments

The Michigan conference of the Wesleyan Methodist church, at its session at the camp grounds near Hastings all last week, has adjourned with ministerial appointments as follows:

- Allegan, A. R. Merrill; Allendale, F. VanderWeide; Bedford, C. M. Lash; Berlin, H. W. Bugbee; Brighton, R. E. Durkee; Clarksville, L. F. Burkee; Coldwater, D. G. Hoggins; Diamond Springs, M. Lewis; Eaton Rapids, A. A. Bryan; Grand Rapids, J. A. McPherson; Hastings, F. G. Barker; Hickory Corners, B. A. Hammond; Holland, G. Visser; Ingham, Ernest Crocker; Jackson, M. H. Kingsbury; Lansing, F. J. Wilson; Parma, G. L. Denmore; Owosso, C. S. Rennells; Romulus, W. Irish; Shiawassee, D. C. Beach; Pittsford, William Gearhart; Rives Junction, W. F. Hall; Waldron, A. D. Wright.

Rev. C. B. Whitaker is continued on the faculty of Houghton college, and Hazel Rodgers Banker as missionary to India.

Steps have been taken toward launching an evangelistic campaign the coming year. This would include the organization of an evangelistic party.

Following the conference, a week's camp meeting opened Sunday, with an audience that filled the spacious auditorium. Rev. J. S. Willett, publishing agent of Syracuse, N. Y., and Rev. J. R. Pitt, pastor of the college church of Houghton, N. Y., were the speakers. Many were present from distant parts of the state as well as from nearby communities.

Wesleyan Methodists Elect Rev. Frank R. Birch as President

Wesleyan Methodists of northern Michigan, assembled in Cadillac on their new camp ground in annual conference Friday, elected the following officers:

President, Rev. Frank R. Birch; vice president, Rev. Leon Stults; secretary, Rev. C. E. Zike; treasurer, E. W. Woodruff.

Mrs. Susan McCarty, editor of the Wesleyan Missionary magazine and a world traveler, gave an address before the conference Friday evening.

The camp meeting was to open Saturday evening and continue all through this week. Evangelists Tedor of Ohio and Marvin of Pennsylvania were the principal speakers.

Organize Oil Company

Organization of a corporation to undertake oil well drilling west of Grand Rapids has been started by S. R. Anderson of that city. Acreage has been leased and the operators expect to start drilling test wells by Sept. 15.

Traverse Backs Its Music Camp

Nearly half the stock Traverse City folk were asked to take in the National High School Orchestra camp was sold in one day.

At a meeting of business men it was proposed to finance the camp by a stock issue of $40,000. The National Band Instrument Manufacturers association has agreed to take $15,000, leaving $25,000 to be taken up in Traverse City.

The stock bears 7 per cent interest. It is equivalent to a loan as, according to present plans, it will be retired within a few years when the proceeds from scholarships and the Sunday concerts have accumulated enough money. The camp soon will be on a paying basis, it was explained, but the cost of constructing the entire camp this season has brought about a big deficit for the first year.

Oldest Twins?

Mrs. Frances Peterson, above; Mrs. Mary Halbert, below, both of White Hall, Ill., in their ninetieth year, believe they are the oldest living twins in the United States. They were born in 1839, the daughters of Joel Jennings.

How to Achieve Beauty

After you are completely relaxed cover your eyes with these little eye pads, steeping them first in hot water.

A VACATION FOR

THE STAY-AT-HOME

It is not the fortunate lot of all of us to be able to spend our vacations away from home. But because we must, of circumstance, forego the trip to mountain or beach, we need not necessarily forego the vacation itself.

If you must content yourself with your everyday surroundings during the vacation season, determine in your own mind to treat yourself to at least a valiant imitation of the real thing.

Every one of us have felt at some time or other that the most perfect boon the fates could grant would be one extra hour of sleep in the morning. What most of us fail to realize is that nature is urging us into expressing that wish. Your body needs it, or your mind would not crave it so.

Appoint yourself two definite weeks, announce to the family that your vacation is going to start, and begin it gloriously with the extra sleep you have wanted all your life! Before you begin to protest, let me assure you that I thoroughly appreciate the demands of the home and the family. I know that to the conscientious housewife, it seems nothing short of crime to permit breakfast for the business man to take place without your immediate supervision. But use a little common sense and see how perfectly you can live up to your responsibilities, even though you do "lie down on the job!"

The night before arrange a little tray. A half a melon perhaps (you may leave it in the ice box to chill), a cooked cereal neatly arranged in its proper dish, the cream pitcher empty waiting for the morning's milk, and the coffee measured out into the percolator, waiting only for the touch of a match or the turning on of the electric switch. Should there be children, you can carry out the tray idea perfectly, for they will love the sense of responsibility which the average mother always denies them.

A little baby, of course, complicates the situation, but in this case, begin now to plan your day's work so that when the baby takes his nap you, too, can utilize that peaceful hour for rest.

Simplify your menu as much as you can, and the season's fruits will aid you immeasurably in this undertaking. With cherries and peaches and berries and melons flooding the market, with lettuce crisp and inviting, and tomatoes and cucumbers fresh and redolent of the summer garden, your meals must be simple or you will have failed to take advantage of the earth's bounty.

Buy a bag of coarse sea salt and another of pine needles and every day during your home-made vacation let your body know the comfort and the stimulation of an artificial sea bath. After the bath, which for perfect satisfaction should immediately precede your siesta hour, relax completely, covering your eyes with the little eye pads I have pictured, steeping them first in hot water. The pads are filled with herbs, blended to reduce inflammation; relax strained muscles, and bring a blessed relief to weary, aching eyes.

The World and All

IF IFS AND ANDS—

If Commander Byrd gets stuck in the ice with his party, he will not be the first man rescued.

If the prize ring measures up to the present champion, preliminary entertainments at the big bouts will consist of short lectures on the Fourth Dimension.

If young John D. and Henry Ford get into a restoring contest, perhaps the entire thirteen original colonies will be restored to their original condition and kept that way for the education of the rest of the nation.

If the explorers of all nations continue to crowd each other in the dashes for remote places, arrangements will have to be made to use the equator as the starting line, and all the expeditions will have to await the starter's gun.

If the air gets any more clogged up with talk, somebody will have to give us a whispering radio that will get in under the big sound waves when nobody is looking.

If this flying from shore to ship and from ship to shore becomes the popular method of crossing the ocean, the big ships will anchor half-seas over and let 'em fly on and off. Maybe they'll serve tea between hops.

If Americans who make fun of their country had to live in the next best country for four or five years, they would appreciate a good bath when they got home.

If all movies get to talking we will get more brains and less beauty on the screen. It takes more intelligence to talk well than it does to look movie-prettily.

If American policemen would learn to talk politely, even to motorists, this country would make a reputation for itself.

If your bodily ills were half as bad as we think they are, we would all be dead.

If the St. Lawrence waterway is ever properly completed, Chicago will become the biggest city in the world.

If the Nicaragua Canal isn't completed before the next world war, we'll wish it had been started a little earlier.

If the English and French can ever forget their suspicions of one another a tunnel will be constructed under the English channel.

If I were a girl I'd wear more red. Some shade of red is becoming to any girl, and it's mighty effective.

If the average beau would save half of his compliments for the girl until after marriage, there would be few divorces.

And if you don't believe that, try a few of those courting compliments on your wife!

Holland Finds Health Precautions Pay

Health authorities are fostering plans for another campaign among unvaccinated pupils in the public schools against diphtheria and smallpox with the opening of the school year. Next year's campaign will be waged against scarlet fever, thereby combating these diseases in alternate years.

Since the campaign against diphtheria and smallpox was launched health records show but one case of diphtheria and no cases of smallpox among the school population in four years. Last fall's campaign against scarlet fever was so successful not a single case was reported among the school population for the year and Holland was held up as an example for a perfect score for the entire state.

Holland Missionaries To Return to Arabia

Rev. and Mrs. Dirk Dykstra of Holland have announced Sept. 25 as their sailing date for Arabia, where they have been engaged as missionaries for the Reformed Church in America for more than 20 years. They are nearing the close of their third furlough, which has been devoted largely to visiting many churches in the interest of their work in the orient.

Dykstra first left for Arabia in 1906 following his graduation from Hope college. Mrs. Dykstra, former Holland township girl, was granted her commission in 1907 and left for Arabia in the fall of that year. They were married in Arabia as a culmination of friendship formed at Hope college.

A Game to Play

Here is a game to play at a party or at home. One player begins, "I like a man who is amiable and affable," then the second continues, "bright and breezy," and the third "cute and clean." The fourth person must take D, the fifth E, and so on until Z is reached. Of course it is difficult to think of anything for X and Z, and those who have these letters are the unlucky ones.

The most amusing way of playing the game is to play it as fast as possible, each player bringing out his two words in a flash without thinking; but remember that the qualities must be good; such words as "abominable" or "bad" not being accepted. Those players who cannot think of their two words within a stated space of time must pay a forfeit at the end of the game. It is a splendid game for improving one's vocabulary.

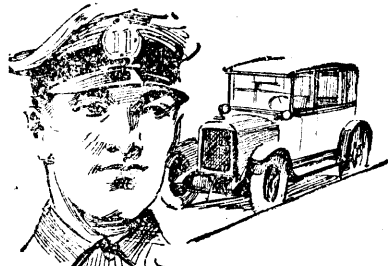

Week of September 9
General Farm Outlook—It is our opinion from the look out of weather causes that the week beginning September 9 in most parts of Michigan, especially the lower peninsula, will need more warmth than it will get to properly mature the growing crops. Temperatures are expected to average somewhat below the seasonal normal which will be unfavorable for the ripening of corn and other crops. Frost damage is to be expected in some counties. Rainfall will not be so heavy as to hinder the bean harvest or injure the crop to any great extent. In fact, there will be considerable sunshine that will do much toward ripening the growing fruit and other crops. The sunny weather will also be a good time to complete the wheat seeding in most parts of the state.

Weather for the Week—The very early part of the week of September 9th in Michigan will be fair and cool. Some cloudiness will ensue about Monday or Tuesday that may bring some scattered showers and wind storms.

The middle part of the week will witness clear skies and sunshine with the temperatures still about to a little below the seasonal normal.

By Thursday temperatures will be warmer. With this change the winds will become stronger, cloudiness will increase and for the next two or three days many parts of the state will experience rain and wind storms between periods of sunshine.

When your Children Cry for It

Castoria is a comfort when Baby is fretful. No sooner taken than the little one is at ease. If restless, a few drops soon bring contentment. No harm done, for Castoria is a baby remedy, meant for babies. Perfectly safe to give the youngest infant; you have the doctors' word for that! It is a vegetable product and you could use it every day. But it's in an emergency that Castoria means most. Some night when constipation must be relieved—or colic pains—or other suffering. Never be without it; some mothers keep an extra bottle, unopened, to make sure there will always be Castoria in the house. It is effective for older children, too; read the book that comes with it.

RESTLESS LOVE

CHAPTER III

Martha busied herself about the stand. Just as well not to go back to the house with this fire in her cheeks. When she did go, she was demure again. She said, "How do you do, Mrs. Shirlaw." Then, "That was a funny one, Mother. Two men. They bought all the berries. I'll put some more out." With which she tossed the bank note on the tea table and went into the house.

Half an hour later she put down her novel. She couldn't read. Those boys had stolen her mood. Their breezy, care-free manners were appealing. And their humor. Their speech was good. Nice people, evidently. Just full of fun. And she thought about the green car. The motor ran so smoothly you could hardly hear it. What fun it would be to roll secretly, luxuriously through the moonlight. Swiftly. Ride far. Rather different from the Ford.

She sat, coloring again, a slim finger pressed against prettily curved lips. Her eyes strayed toward the front windows. Abruptly then, but quietly, she laid the book on the table and slipped out into the hall. The telephone was in the coat closet under the stairs. If you shut yourself in there, and spoke guardedly, you couldn't be heard on the porch.

She called the Pews. Kitty answered. Martha giggled before she spoke. And she could feel that fire coming into her cheeks, there in the dark. "Listen, Kit," she said. "Doing anything tonight?"

"Not a thing. Why?"

"I'll tell you. It's funny. I had sort of a pick-up just now. At the stand. Two students. Awfully attractive. And a wonderful car. They want to take us for a ride." Another giggle. "It's a regular blind date. How's your courage?"

"Courage? If an eskimo invited me into his igloo I'd jump at it. I'm simply bored to death. This is the slowest town . . ."

"Then listen! Tell you what. You call up pretty soon and ask me over to dinner."

"Great! And I'll tell Aunt Emma I'm going over with you." Kitty was giggling, too. "It's risky, but shucks! You've got to take chances if you're to have any fun at all."

"We'll pick up a hot dog or something and meet them. I'll go now. You call back."

It was not their first subterfuge of this sort. The Bagots looked up to the Pews, but seldom met Kitty's aunt socially. To both these high-spirited girls it appeared as a device for occasional escapes into the bright world of adventure.

Soon the bell rang.

"Martha!" called Harriet, from the porch. "Telephone!"

"Yes, mother." A moment later the girl appeared in the doorway. It's Kitty Pew, Mother. I think she wants me to come over to dinner. Do you want to talk with her?"

"Why, yes." Harriet hurried within. On her return she remarked to Hilda, "That was nice of the child. Martha doesn't have too many good times. I have to recognize that." She sighed. "But my, what a job it is to keep a lively youngster organized!"

At eight-twenty that evening the two girls were walking discreetly along the side road, in the dusk, under the elms. The green car appeared; stopped. The blond young man named Jim opened the door with a merry grin and a "Great stuff! George was a pessimist. Said you'd never be here. But I've told him all along that he could trust those blue eyes. Hop in."

"This is my friend," said Martha, with an outer air of calm. "Her name's Kitty."

"And what's yours?"

"Well . . . Martha."

"Honest?"

"Yes," said Kitty, looking straight at them, taking them in. "Those are our real names."

"Great stuff! And we're really George and Jim. You and George can have the back seat, Kitty. Or as much of it as you want. See that you make him behave. Come on in with me, Martha . . . Well, boys and girls, we're off!"

On this same Friday evening, rather late, the Pew brothers, Ham and Homer, sat in their shirt sleeves at their desks in the front office of the Age. The weekly rush was over. All the late matter was in type, and the proofs corrected. Miss Curry had said good night and gone home. The big press was rumbling, launched on its all-night task. Ben March, the foreman, appeared, sleeves rolled up around his arm-garters, green eyeshade pushed up into his stubby red hair, and laid a damp copy of the new issue on each desk. And each of the brothers settled back in his swivel chair to look it carefully through.

Ham Pew appeared much as his father must have appeared at thirty-four . . . long, bony; a shrewd, rather wrinkly face with plenty of nose and chin. Like Ben March, he wore an eyeshade. And he was smoking an old curved pipe.

Homer was tall, too, but more shapely. His brown hair curled a little in spite of much stern brushing back. The eyes were hazel; clear, frank eyes, set well apart. The forehead square, and not too high. An attractive young man, with considerably more than the average distinction. A pleasant but thoughtful face. He was the younger by nine years.

Both, without speaking, and after a cursory glance at the front page headings, turned to the editorial; Ham because he had written it, Homer because it disturbed him. For the past six weeks, by Ham's orders, a running head had been used on the editorial . . . "Ackland's Sore Spot."

Homer looked the column over; considered it; spoke, in a casual tone. "How long are you going to keep this editorial head, Ham?"

The older man straightened slightly in his chair; removed his pipe and knocked out the ashes; reached for a steel letter opener, and thoughtfully scraped the bowl. Then he looked out through the wide front window at the village green. He could see the Civil War monument, a plain shaft of granite, and beyond it the big white tablet bearing the names of the boys from Ackland who had served in the World War. It was illuminated by spotlights. His own name was there. And there were eleven gold stars.

"I'm going to keep that head," he said, very quietly—Ham was always quiet—"until we've run that damned roadhouse gang out of town."

Both resumed their inspection of the paper.

The telephone rang. Homer answered. "Homer Pew speaking . . . What do you want to say to him?"

about it. It's the sort of thing that's going on everywhere. People like having an attractive place to eat and dance.

"And drink."

"Yes, and drink. But who isn't drinking? We may as well be honest about that. Nine-tenths of the decent householders of this town are buying the stuff or making it. Right along. There again, I'm afraid you're up against the mass instinct. You know as well as I that you can't go to anybody's house for dinner without having cocktails thrown at you. And with a lot more enthusiasm than in the old days, from what folks tell me. And as for Jazzland, while it's true that some unfortunate incidents happen there once in a while, still it's gay and bright, I understand, with good food and good music. It's popular. A good deal more popular than we are."

"It's a symbol, Homer."

"Of life today. It's what we've got to lick or go under."

Homer, in frank disagreement now, spoke out even more vigorously. "I pick up a good deal of the talk about town. And it's pretty clear to me that we're losing ground. We are, Ham. It isn't that anybody thinks, or at least says, you're wrong. They don't. They know you're square, and they recognize your courage. But moral and ethical issues have a way of getting themselves confused. They get tangled up with personal attitudes. People—the folks around town—can't figure out what you're up to. Jim Swan, the other day, spoke to me of a rumor that you were figuring on running for congress, like Dad."

"I'm not figuring on running for anything."

"Of course. I laughed it off. But the devil of it was, I realized then I didn't know myself what you're up to. I don't know. I hate to see them playing with the notion that you're trying to make personal capital out of our town problems. But I'm blessed if I know how to convince 'em that you're not. Most of them, of course, would jump at the chance to do just that. The average man sees things that way. And he won't concede you or me motives any higher than his own."

There was a long silence. Pipes were refilled. Homer said: "This isn't getting us any nearer home, Ham." Then, rising: "I'll admit that this business of a mucker calling up to threaten you is a little on my nerves, Ham. I don't like it."

"That? Why bless your heart, Homer, that's the most encouraging thing that's happened in weeks!"

"Encouraging? Gosh!"

"Certainly. It proves that I'm right."

"That you're . . ."

"That I'm right. I'm striking at a vital spot. They find themselves forced to hit back. Fine! We're getting somewhere now. Somewhere real. That Jazzland place is run, of course, by one of the bootlegging rings. That almost goes without saying. But I couldn't go before the grand jury of this county with evidence that would stand up for two minutes. That's the real trouble."

"Getting evidence that's worth a damn. I'm working on it, but in the dark. That dirty telephone message tells me I'm on the right track. Bang on the main line. Just stop a minute. Think close. Who'd send such a message as that? Not any ordinary inkeeper. And not any ordinary inkeeper with his way to make in the community. No, sir! That came from the works. I've touched home."

He reached for the office telephone and asked for the chief operator. Macy," he said, "a rather odd message was phoned in here a few minutes ago. Do you suppose you could find out where it came from? . . . Yes, the only message we've had since about

CHAPTER IV

"The fact is, Ham . . . I may as well say it . . . I don't see where we're getting with it. We're not making a cent. Can't kid ourselves about that."

"No, we're just scraping along. Living off the job business, really. But there's money enough."

"Yes, there's money enough. In a way. But . . . Look here, Ham, I know you're not a fanatic. And you're anything but a fool. You're looking ahead. You're figuring on getting somewhere. But where? We've fought all the modern encroachments in the town. I've been with you there. I'm sentimental enough about the old place. But we've lost every battle."

"Not yet."

"Haven't we, though? Look at the movies, and the hot dog stands and the automobile camp and the dance hall at Harper's pond. They're in, all of 'em. I don't like 'em any more than you do. But they're in. We fought Jazzland. Well, it's in, isn't it?"

"What of it?"

"What of it?" The color of long-suppressed heat was in Homer's voice now. "This of it! I can't get around the notion that what we're really up against is the very spirit of the age. And if that's true, we can't win."

"Why can't we?"

Homer stirred impatiently. "The truth is, Ham, I can't figure you out. Take this Jazzland business. Everybody but you is more or less fatalistic eleven-fifteen . . . Thanks. Yes, do, please."

She sat, a slim finger pressed against prettily curved lips.

"She says she'll try. Well, that's that. And now, Homer, I'm going to try to state my objective. This talk-tee isn't exactly up my street, but I'm going to try. You ask what I'm getting at. Well . . . here! You'll admit that these are rather abnormal times. Since the war. All over the world. Pretty crazy times. There's a tremendous wave of materialism. Sweeping us off our feet. You see that. Morals are chaotic. Granted? Right! With a good-looking little sister to bring up and do something about, we know that. All the old institutions are shaky. The church? . . . More or less a dignified but pretty hollow shell. I'm afraid. Marriage? . . . One divorce to every seven or eight weddings. And the figures getting worse every year. The law? He smiled sadly . . . "A good deal of an expensive and complicated and incompetent mass. The home? . . . Invaded, riddled. Civilization itself? . . . Pretty badly smashed up in the war. Oh we're prosperous enough, but stand off and clear your mind of little things, and narrow your eyes, and Ham at about this time finished brushing his teeth and moved soberly along the hall toward his room. There was a window, midway of the hall, set in a niche where, as far back as he could remember, the soiled clothes hamper had stood. He often paused there to look out at the big elms in the yard, and at night the sky above them, and arrange his thoughts before going to bed. He noted, now, as he stopped there, a few girlish garments on the floor by the hamper. Kitty's things. His rather wide mouth twisted into a brooding smile. Kitty always simply threw her clothes toward the hamper. And either he or Aunt Emma always picked them up. What an amusing, really lovely youngster Kitty was! All impulse. Bright as a dollar. He and she had a bantering way of talking, in which she always tossed smartly back everything he said.

It was his settled habit to kiss her good night the last thing. He was father as well as brother, and felt the responsibility deeply. He softly opened the door. She was a heavy sleeper, and never roused at his touch. He was still smiling as he stood peering about the dim, disorderly room. Tiptoeing to the bed, he looked down at the close-clipped, boyish head resting on a round white arm. He bent over and kissed the flushed cheek.

With a start he straightened up, his hands tightening at his sides. For a long moment he stood, bewildered. Then, frowning in the dark, he bent over again. Incredulity, confusion, a stern new sense of anger battled within his breast. The odor of gin was on her breath.

He went out, drew the door to, hurriedly shut himself within his own room, where he stood a long time struggling to find a way through the confusion in his mind.

"Little Kitty!" he thought, over and over. "My little Kitty!" Then, "My own home!" Bitterness was rising, a murderous hatred of the world that was overwhelming his town. "Here in my own home!"

Then this aloud: "Homer thinks I'm a fanatic. Well, he's right. I'm going to be one now. And by God, I'm going through!"

Teacher: "William, will you please wash your face?"

One minute later he came up with half his face washed.

Teacher: "William, you didn't wash the other half of your face."

William: "Please, teacher, that's as far as my shirt tail reached."

The new Buick is the new Style

More than handsome... more than luxurious... a wonderful new type of motor car beauty... a thrilling turning point in body design

It will be imitated, of course! The new, the fine and the beautiful always inspire emulation. But so great is the cost of building the magnificent new Fisher bodies for the Silver Anniversary Buick that imitation will be possible only to much smaller cars, and even these will find difficulty in following where Buick leads!

$1,500,000 has been expended in manufacturing the dies alone for the new Buick bodies; and the gracefully curving side panels which form one of their distinguishing characteristics represent the most expensive steel paneling work employed on any automobile in the world!
