Sometimes it pays to protest mistreatment at the hands of authority. During the spring vacation Paul Wilcox drove to Allegan to a movie and when he started for home an officer on duty advised him that he had parked four inches over the line, which was very dim. Paul settled for $5 and resolved to avoid Allegan in the future. Later someone from Allegan heard the facts, took up the matter and the Allegan city council voted to return the money and all feel better. We often wonder if there are not many instances like this that result in driving away trade and no one knows why.

Shower

Mrs. Margaret Levesee and Clara Hutchins gave a surprise miscellaneous shower in honor of the June bride to be, Miss Emma Thayer, at the home of Clara Hutchins, Thursday evening April 25th.

The evening was spent with music and games. The bride received many beautiful gifts and says it takes Margaret and Clara to give a good surprise.

At ten o'clock ice cream and cake was served and all departed wishing Emma much happiness.

Golden Wedding

Sunday, April 28, 1929, Mr. and Mrs. Oliver P. Hudson entertained their children and grand children at pleasant home here celebrating the fiftieth anniversary of their wedding. A fish dinner started the festivities and O. P. says that while on his wedding day he could have gone out in twenty minutes and caught fish enough for a multitude that Lohrberg Bros. had to scour southwestern Michigan and finally make a special trip to South Haven to get enough for his fiftieth.

The day was spent as a family reunion thoroughly enjoyed by all from the host himself to his youngest grand son and at a late hour the party dispersed, leaving substantial gifts to commemorate the occasion. Probably no others living are as well versed in the history of this community and its people as Mr. and Mrs. Hudson. Spending the entire fifty years in this section and always taking part in the social and business life and growth they have acquired data from actual experience more interesting than can be obtained from books and the marked changes during this time are almost unbelievable to the present generation.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Hudson have escaped the trials of these years with little damage to health and are determined to add many more useful and happy years. We join with their many friends in wishing for them continued health and happiness.

Another

A very pleasant birthday surprise was planned by Mrs. Fay White and children last week for her husband the occasion being his forty first birthday. About twenty five people were invited, and progressive pedro was the evening's entertainment, John Reigle carrying off first honors and Mrs. Ed Mann contented with the consolation. A bountiful buffet luncheon was then served, after which Mr. White received many remembrances from his family and friends.

Forty one strikes with an axe handle left an indelible impression on Fay's mind, that he was that old at least. His daughter and husband and Mr. and Mrs. Frank White of Kalamazoo were the out of town guests. All departed at a hour wishing Mr. White many more such occasions.

The "Bottle Scared Veteran" were present full force.

School Notes

All rooms down stairs banked 100% last week.

Prosecuting Attorney Williams of Van Buren County was the speaker at chapel last Friday. His subject was "Law as a Profession," and he pointed out many practical things relative to that profession. We want to thank Attorney Williams for coming to Gobles. William Clement played a trumpet solo, and the assembly sang two popular songs.

Covert here May 7. We want to thank the local business men for closing early for the game with Bloomingdale last Friday. The Athletic Association was able to clear about $20 on this game, which was badly needed at this time. We also wish to thank Mr. Curtiss who officiated at the game without charge.

Last week Wednesday the Kalamazoo College Deputation group put on a program in the interest of Kalamazoo College. Among the numbers were two trumpet solos played by Ned Thomas, who is indeed an artist with the trumpet. The afternoon session was lengthened 30 minutes in order that this program would not interfere with the regular school work.

By mistake Paul Oram's name was left off the Honor Roll for last month. We will try not to let that happen again. Class honors and averages will be printed next week.

The Freshman class has been selling Gobles High School arm bands during the past week. Judging from appearances they are meeting with some success.

The Senior Class repeated the play, "Nora Wake Up" to a good crowd at Alamo last Friday night.

The Junior High Hygiene class is making a very interesting study of various birds, for project work. Some very good looking note books have been completed.

The baseball game with Bloomingdale last Friday ended 7 to 0 in their favor. The lack of hitting ability and errors cost Gobles the game. The work of White and Velej for Gobles was outstanding. Harry played his first game behind the bat and did a good job too.

With so many school activities going on, it sometimes happens that little bills are contracted and lost sight of and therefore go unpaid. It is our intention to pay all bills promptly and if the bill isn't paid promptly a statement should be mailed to Mr. Stratton who will present it to the student treasurer for payment. Therefore, we ask all business men to check school accounts to make sure that everything is paid.

AIRMAIL GAINS IN MICHIGAN

The cities on the Michigan air mail route shows a gain in the report just made public for the month of March by the Thompson Aeronautical corporation. For some time it has slumped, but now there is evidence that effort is being made to get in line with the other shipping centers and benefit from this modern day service.

Total poundage for all cities for February was 8,489 pounds and 4 1/2 ounces, while the March total jumped to 9,318 pounds and 10 1/2 ounces.

The three cities topping the list remain the same for March as February, these being Chicago, Detroit and Kalamazoo, the others having shifted, as has Battle Creek.

Poundage for each city on the Michigan route for February and March follows:

Bids for 80 feet of West Huron street frontage, owned by the Pontiac Board of Commerce, were asked by the directors of the organization preparatory to closing options on 50 feet of Perry street frontage adjacent to the Hildenbrand hotel and the drawing of plans for a new home for the board. The options held by the organization call for the payment of $102,000 for the Perry street property which extends from Perry to Mill streets. The board is to retain 60 feet frontage at Perry and West Huron streets.

Michigan Road, Built in 1872, Cost $450 Per Mile

Michigan's first public highway was built at a cost of $450 a mile through virgin timber. Today the state pays at least $35,000 a mile for its best roads—but there is a difference in quality.

The construction history of that first highway came to light recently when C. H. Stannard, former Dexter postmaster, found an original contract among the affects of his grandfather and forwarded it to Frank D. Fitzgerald, business manager of the highway department.

The original "trunk line" stretched from Detroit to Chicago and is known today as U. S. highway 112. It was started in 1827, 10 years before the territory was admitted to the Union. When it was completed is not known.

But the road bed has seen the days of transportation by oxen give way to stage coaches and pony mail and then to automobiles and busses. Even today the speeding motor coaches carrying passengers from Detroit to Chicago pass the ancient taverns and rugged farm houses standing as mute reminders of a romantic past.

In 1827, the road builders worried not a bit about the surface. Their problem was one of clearing a path through the forests. The only specifications for the road itself were that the earth should be plowed from the sides to the center and curved to facilitate drainage. Today, the state's contract deal in detail with the size of gravel to be used or the amount of cement in proportion to sand and how it shall be poured.

Contracts for the road were awarded for each mile individually. The one Stannard found was for the thirty-seventh mile, which would be near Saline. It was awarded to George Meachem and D. J. Ely by Musgrove Evans, federal agent in the territory.

The original work established one precedent that is followed even today. Evans required that contractors post a bond for twice the amount of their bid. This practice still is adhered to, but bonds today are usually for several hundred thousand instead of for $900.

Meachem and Ely agreed under the contract to clear all trees and shrubs for a right-of-way of 60 feet, to plow a 20-foot roadway and build culverts. Specifications for the culverts were that they must be of oak at least six inches thick.

The contractors were given a year to complete the mile.

VAIL MEDAL GIVEN TO FOUR

Award of the Theodore N. Vail medal of bronze for 1928 has been made to four Michigan telephone people, two men and two women, three of them employees of the Michigan Bell Telephone company and one an employe of the Benzie Consolidated Telephone Company, it is announced by the committee of award.

Those receiving the award are: Mrs. Mary Smith, chief operator, Thompsonville, whose work at the switchboard is credited with having saved the town from destruction by fire; Mrs. Irva MacIntyre, operating agent, Hopkins, whose prompt initiative in handling an unusual call saved the life of an aged woman; Louis B. Flood, construction foreman, Battle Creek, who saved the life of a workman who had come in contact with a high voltage wire at Monroe; James Fisher, lineman, Ann Arbor, whose prompt action at the time of an automobile collision on the highway near Novi prevented a badly injured man from bleeding to death.

New Grand Rapids Bank to Have $750,000 of Capital

Oversubscription to the stock of the American National bank, Grand Rapids, at the capitalization originally planned of $300,000 with a surplus of $150,000, has resulted in a decision by the organizers to increase the capitalization to $500,000 with a surplus of $250,000. It is probable that of the $250,000 designed as surplus, $50,000 will be undivided profits. Shares in the proposed bank have been sold at $150 a share.

The U. S. Comptroller of Currency has approved the increase in capitalization and has informed the organizers to amend their application on that basis.

According to Gen. John H. Scouten, vice-president of the Michigan Trust company, who heads the organizers of the American National bank, the tentative date for opening of the new financial institution is June 1. The old banking quarters of the Home State Bank for Savings, Monroe and Ionia avenues, have been secured by the American National. Other organizers are: Brinton F. Hall, Alexander Robertson, Cyrus B. Newcomb and John D. MacNaughton.

STATE TO HONOR THOMAS A. EDISON

Michigan will have an outstanding year in the world-wide observance this year of Light's Golden Jubilee, marking the fiftieth anniversary of Thomas A. Edison's invention of the first practical incandescent lamp.

The climax of the celebration will come Monday, Oct. 24, and will center in Michigan. On that day jubilee tribute will be paid to the inventor. The exercises will be held at Dearborn in the original Edison laboratories, which with the machines with which the inventor worked, are now being moved from Menlo Park, N. J., to the Henry Ford museum of American industry. The exercises will be broadcast to the world from the laboratories at Dearborn.

The return of Edison to Michigan for the high point of Light's Golden Jubilee is of more than ordinary significance to the people of the state who remember that the "wizard" is a former Michigan resident.

"You guarantee to cure T. B., don't you?"

"Yes, sir, never fail if my instructions are followed."

"Son took your medicine for a year and then died."

"My instructions were not followed. I ordered him to take it two years."

Aid Mail Limited By Lack of Airports

The postoffice department has made no change in its policy that cities desiring a connection with the present air-mail service must provide adequate airport facilities for landing airplanes, it was stated orally at the department.

The department, it was explained, is inclined to extend its air-mail lines, but extension in many localities is impossible because of a lack of suitable airports.

The latest city to comply with the policy of the department is Springfield, Ohio, which has been made a stop on the route between Cleveland and Louisville, Ky. Cleveland is also linked with the transcontinental air-mail line between New York City and San Francisco, giving Springfield air communication with a number of cities, it was stated.

Notice that Springfield has been selected as a stop in the present network of air mail lines was made by the Second Assistant Postmaster General, W. Irving Glover. According to Mr. Glover's records, Springfield is a large manufacturing center, and consequently the department anticipates a large volume of mail from this place when airplanes land there May 1, the opening date approved by Mr. Glover. The full text of Mr. Glover's notice follows:

"Effective May 1, 1929, Springfield, Ohio, will be embraced for supply on Rt. CAM-16. The postoffice at Springfield will be furnished with a special cancellation for use on air mail matter dispatched to CAM-16 on this date."

Report Ford Purchase Of German Auto Plant

Moving to counteract the transaction of the General Motors company with the Opel firm, Henry Ford has recently purchased the Brennabor Motor Works at Brandenburg-on-Havel, Germany, hoping to compete successfully with the Opel Company in the production of a small cheap type of motor car, according to reports prevalent at Brandenburg.

While the Brennabor firm thus far is denying any agreement of that kind, the reports persist in mentioning Ford's purchase of the company at 90,000,000 marks, approximately $22,000,000.

Officials of the Ford Motor company on March 25 announced that 103,193 persons were employed at the Rouge plant, 18,231 at the Highland Park plant and 5,468 at the Lincoln plant, a total of 126,892 employed in the three Detroit district plants. It was stated that an average of more than 8,000 Model A cars a day is being maintained.

Builds $600,000 Plant

The Detroit Wax Paper Company has purchased six acres at Pleasant avenue and the Michigan Central railroad in River Rouge and immediately will begin the erection of a new plant on the site. The company manufactures cardboard and wax paper. The new plant will cost between $600,000 and $700,000 and will be ready for occupancy shortly after July 1. It will be about 210x600 feet.

PLACE SIGNS ON SPAWNING BEDS

"Experimental fish refuge—no fishing please."

That's the sign that will be placed this year on about 500 natural spawning beds of bass and bluegills in Michigan lakes and streams. The work of locating and placing these signs will be in charge of Henry Schuil of Grand Rapids, under direction of the fish division of the state conservation department.

Game wardens with the assistance of abutting property owners are to keep a close check on the operating of the posted areas. Future laws may be based on the initial results obtained in these experimental efforts.

The attitude of the fishermen and their willingness to co-operate with the letter and spirit of these signs will have much to do with the future enforcement possibilities of such markers, and in the development of the fish refuge plan in Michigan.

Chicago Oil Company Favors Newaygo Field

Another oil well will start in Brooks township, Newaygo county, soon, the Ranke Oil and Gas Co. having moved a rig into section 5. It is expected the drillers will spud in this week. The Ranke Oil & Gas Co. is a Chicago concern and the location chosen for its first project in the county is on land leased by the Newaygo Oil & Gas Co. Operations at the first well of the company are progressing.

The Lima Atwood well No. 1, which was dry in the Dundee at 2,598 feet, again is being drilled deeper and the drillers will go to the Niagara sands. A good show of oil was encountered in the Traverse sand but was flooded out with salt water.

10-Cent Fares in Force in Port Huron

At midnight, April 15, the new 10-cent fares on street cars and busses went into effect, under terms of the 90-day trial period of operation agreed upon by the city commission and W. G. Fitzpatrick, counsel for the receivers of the Rapid Railway company. The new fares supercede the seven-cent fares. The city commission agreed to lower the assessment on the local lines to $175,000. The board of review last week had reduced the assessment from $375,000 to $200,000.

Michigan Weather Good

If there is any state in the Union, or a section of any other country, that can beat Michigan when it comes to weather it will have to go some. Petoskey appears to have carried off the belt when it comes to freak weather with the variety served up this April. On Sunday at that popular resort the mercury reached 80; at the same time the ice in the lake was still solid and boys were out skating in their shirt sleeves, wearing straw hats.

Acidity

The common cause of digestive difficulties is excess acid. Soda cannot alter this condition, and it burns the stomach. Something that will neutralize the acidity is the sensible thing to take. That is why physicians tell the public to use Phillips Milk of Magnesia.

One spoonful of this delightful preparation can neutralize many times its volume in acid. It acts instantly; relief is quick, and very apparent. All gas is dispelled; all sourness is soon gone; the whole system is sweetened. Do try this perfect anti-acid, and remember it is just as good for children, too, and pleasant for them to take.

Any drugstore has the genuine, prescriptional product.

Land Owners Should Plant Forest Trees On Idle Farm Areas

With the breaking of spring opportunity for reforestation of small idle areas on farms and estates throughout Michigan should receive the attention of her citizens, according to a statement by the school of forestry and conservation of the University of Michigan.

Timber growing experiments near Ann Arbor which have been carried on since 1904 by the university indicate an average growth for close spaced white pine of 27.2 feet in height at age of 22 years, and an average diameter of 3.5 inches at breast height. Maximum diameter of the 27-year-old group is seven inches. Where the spacing between trees was as great as six or eight feet the average diameter is 4.5 inches.

Scotch pine, an important European forest tree and one widely planted in the country, shows an average height growth of 34.0 feet in 22 years and an average diameter of 4.5 inches. The maximum diameter is 9.7 inches and the plantation is closely spaced. This tree, however, is not so attractive nor so valuable as the native white and Norway pines.

Among the hardwoods planted are red oak, with a height of 18 feet in 16 years and a diameter of 1.8 inches; tulip or yellow poplar, on good soil, with a height of 21.7 feet and a diameter of 2.1 inches in 19 years; and black locust, 28.6 feet high in 14 years with a diameter of 3.6 inches. With the exception of tulip, the plantations are on rather poor gravelly soil of low agricultural value.

Lagging far behind Massachusetts, New York, New Jersey and Pennsylvania, which have been prominent in lumber history, Michigan has a comparatively small number of privately owned forest plantations. More of these are needed for demonstration purposes, according to the university foresters, and as a means of utilizing areas which now bring no revenue to the owners.

Most of the sandy or gravelly hillsides owned by Michigan farmers will support pine trees and these may be purchased reasonably from the department of conservation. Of course, the trees are small, measuring little over four inches in height, and they are planted much as one would set out a tomato or cabbage plant except that less care is necessary and that no water is used. If the trees are spaced six feet by six feet about 1,200 trees are required per acre; if the spacing is eight feet by eight feet, half of the above number will do. The plantation must be protected from fire and grazing, but will not need cultivation. Trouble with insects or disease should be reported to the school of forestry and conservation at Ann Arbor.

Aside from an assured future income as against total idleness of the land, a plantation of this sort will add greatly to the beauty of any farm or estate property and will serve especially to warm the winter landscape in the drearier portions of the year. As thinning becomes necessary at the age of 15 to 20 years, fuel, farm repair material and perhaps in the future, pulpwood, will furnish some revenue.

No less than twenty owners per county in the more densely settled portions of the state should secure trees for planting during the present spring. Two good men with mattocks can plant an acre or more in a day.

On better soils that are idle, Norway spruce will make a good showing, and on the thinner soils poorly adapted either to white pine, Norway pine or Norway spruce, jack pine may be used.

Contrary to the ordinary belief, pine timber makes good cover for game and fur-bearing animals and attracts bird life.

Michigan should be able to distance the older states in her private land planting record if her citizens will recognize the beauty and utility of evergreen forests. Advice on particular areas may be secured if the owner will communicate with the University at Ann Arbor.

Deep Plowing Better Beet Yield

The need of sugar beets for a deep well prepared seed bed is shown by the greater yields obtained on deeply plowed soils at Michigan State College.

Soil plowed to a depth of four inches yielded 7 tons of beets which tested 14.9 per cent sucrose. The tests on the effect of the depth of plowing were continued through three years.

Beets on land which had been plowed six inches deep produced 9.8 tons to the acre and these beets tested 15.1 per cent of sucrose. An eight-inch plow depth gave a tonnage of 10.2 tons of beets which tested 15.2 per cent sucrose.

In all these tests, precautions were taken to insure that all factors except the depth of plowing had been eliminated as influences upon the differences of yield. The continuation of the tests for a period of years proved that the depth of plowing had the same effect each year and that the weather during different years would not change the results.

Half of the Michigan beet acreage is planted on spring plowed soil. The plowing should be done as early as possible and the land should then be thoroughly fitted to eliminate all air pockets in the soil.

The contract price offered for beets this year assures a fair profit to all growers who produce a good crop, and any increase in tonnage does not lower the price received by the producer.

Culls

If you want good egg production next winter, see that your pullets are properly fed and cared for during the summer months. Pullets that have been poorly fed and poorly grown cannot be expected to become good producers. The requirements for good growth are: Plenty of house room and range, good feeding, shade and clearliness.

A good time to cut the alfalfa is in the late afternoon because the sun will not wilt the leaves too quickly and cause them to shatter. Hay cut in the morning will not cure right because the leaves will be quickly wilted by the hot sun; the stems will also be full of juice; and the leaves will be dry and may blow away before the stems are ready to stack.

In fertility tests at the experiment station at South Dakota State College, the addition of phosphorus alone has increased the yield of all crops about 30 per cent. This test has been carried on for 15 years.

Gather the eggs at least every day and better twice a day during the hot weather. Keep them in a dry, cool, well-ventilated place. Never wash an egg because it spoils the keeping quality. Market the eggs at least twice a week in hot weather, but keep the small, inferior or dirty eggs at home.

A kindly looking old gentleman was stopped by a very little girl carrying a parcel.

"Please, sir," she said politely, "is this the second turning to the left?"

Poultry

ELIMINATING TUBERCULOSIS LOSSES

Poultrymen should be particularly interested in the problem of avian tuberculosis at this time for a number of reasons. The first of these reasons is that the disease can be kept under control if the proper plan of raising baby chicks is followed. Another reason why poultrymen and general farmers should be interested in the disease and its control is that a large number of the hogs condemned in slaughter-houses for tuberculosis are found to be infected with the avian or poultry form of the disease.

Many poultry raisers feel that their birds are not affected with tuberculosis. Like tuberculosis in cattle, the disease is hard to detect from outward appearances. Even though one or two birds do become thin and run down, and finally die of the disease, to be followed by one or two more a week or so later, and so on through the winter and spring, the trouble may be laid to worms or some other ailment and the problem of eradicating tuberculosis from the flock thus avoided.

Infected birds show external symptoms only in very advanced stages of the disease. They lose weight or "go light" as it is sometimes called, often become lame, and the comb and shanks become pale and shriveled. When picked up such birds will be observed to have very little flesh on their breastbones. Only one or two in the flock will show outward symptoms of the disease at the same time, in all probabilities, and these will eat heartily until almost the time of their death. Other birds in the flock will be infected, however, since the disease is usually widespread in a flock that has one or two infected birds.

Other diseases often cause a loss of weight and outward symptoms similar to these, however, and before a positive diagnosis can be made a post mortem examination is necessary. Lesions of the disease, yellowish in color, and varying from the size of a pinhead to the size of a pea will be found on the liver and spleen of visibly infected birds. Nodules varying from the size of a pea to that of a small walnut will be found on the intestines and the intestinal membranes. Lesions also occur frequently in the kidneys, lungs, skin and bones.

Birds in the very early stages of the disease cannot be detected by external symptoms and in many cases the internal symptoms will not be sufficiently pronounced to be noticeable except to a trained veterinarian. In order to detect the disease in living birds that are in the early stages of the infection, the tuberculin test must be applied by some competent veterinarian. Death losses from the disease do not occur with birds under a year old since chicks do not have it at the time of birth but must contract it from older birds.

Tuberculosis in poultry cannot be cured. Those birds that are known to be infected should be killed and burned. Strict rules of sanitation should be adopted in caring for the flock. If the owner desires merely to avoid losses from the disease he may dispose of all birds over a year old, since younger birds do not have tuberculosis in a severe enough form to cause death. If the poultryman desires to entirely rid his flock of the disease other steps must be taken.

One method of controlling the disease consists of testing all old fowls for tuberculosis with the tuberculin test, which is a rather expensive process. This should be followed by a thorough clean-up and disinfecting of the houses and runs. The test should be made on the flock every six months and all reactors removed at each test. Even then reinfection will occur almost continuously, because it is practically impossible to kill all of the tuberculosis germs in the houses and yards by cleaning and disinfecting. Some airing and the action of sunlight over a period of time are necessary in getting rid of this disease germ.

Since this is true, the following method is probably the best and surest. The first step in this process is to put all chicks hatched or purchased this spring into cleaned and scrubbed brooder houses on fresh ground. Fresh ground means ground that has not been frequented by poultry of any kind, and especially older chickens the year previous. The chicks should be kept out on this fresh ground and away from old birds until time to move the pullets to the laying houses in the fall.

About a month before bringing the pullets into the laying house or houses the old flock should be sold to the last bird. In this way every bird infected with tuberculosis will be removed from the premises. The house should be scrubbed with a hot, concentrated solution of lye water, after all litter and droppings have been moved to a field that is sufficiently removed from the poultry yards to be out of the range of the young flock. After this cleaning and scrubbing has been given the house it should be thrown open so that as much light will reach all parts of the interior as possible and so that air will circulate through it freely.

The yards and runs should be thoroughly cleaned and then plowed up so that air and sunlight will kill all germs present. All of this should be done as soon as the old flock has been removed, or about a month before the new flock is brought to the laying house.

Alfalfa Tests Show Value of Varieties

In point of adaptation to Michigan conditions, alfalfa seed is divided into three classes by trials which have been conducted during the past six years at Michigan State College.

For winter hardiness and continuous heavy production of hay, the group of variegated alfalfas, which includes Hardigan, Grimm, Cossack and Ontario, has given the best results in the college trials.

Common alfalfas from Montana, Utah, Idaho, the Dakotas and Michigan have not yielded as well in the tests as the varieties mentioned in the first class, but the common alfalfas have given good yields of hay and have shown fair resistance to winter killing.

The third group which has proved to be practically worthless under Michigan conditions, includes varieties from Arizona, and those imported from Argentina, Turkestan and Peru. The plants in this group will not survive Michigan winters.

Michigan farmers should choose their alfalfa seed from a variety included in the first two groups. The detailed records of yields obtained from each variety can be obtained from the crops department at Michigan State College.

The tests will be continued on the college plot and any new varieties of seed which may come on the market will be compared with the varieties whose worth has been established.

Clean Oats Add to Acreage

Cleaned and graded oat seed will add several bushels to the acre, declares a Michigan Agricultural College bulletin. Removal of light oats, pin oats, chaff, weed seeds and dirt by the machinery now installed in big seed houses or even by the fanning mills on the farm, will greatly add to the yield. The experiment station has proved this by field trials.

While the home fanning mill does valuable work in cleaning the seed it is by no means as efficacious nor can it remove the weed seeds with anything like the certainty nor to as high a percentage as the machinery installed in the big seed plants.

The extra price for pure seed which has been carefully machined is more than repaid by the additional yield acre of this quality of seed. "In the case of oats, more than other grains," says the bulletin, "large, plump seeds show an increase in production." This is another grain in which the farmer can trace increased yield directly to the seed-factory work.

A great deal of loss is caused each year by the loose smut of oats. It has been proved that this loss can be controlled successfully by proper disinfecting treatment and by removing the diseased seed from the healthy. Formaldehyde is the chemical used in Michigan to disinfect seed of smuts and the experiment station recommends that all oats planted in Michigan should have formaldehyde treatment before planting. It is estimated that oat smut often causes a loss of ten bushels per acre where seed is not treated. It is essential that properly cleaned and tested seed only should be planted in order to secure bumper oat crops.

The Tradition Held Good

By CLARISSA MACKIE

THE old Frost house stood, in its majestic loneliness, on the little hill beyond the Methodist church. In years gone by, the Frost family had been very prominent in Littlefield—the men had been judges, doctors and the real family tradition might have been called hospitality.

War came and took toll of the Frost young men. Judge Frost and his good wife both died during that period, and an only daughter, who had been a nurse in Flanders, had returned to her empty home to be married to an English army officer. Then, locking up the house, she gave it into the keeping of Rose Frost, a distant cousin, who lived nearby, and sadly said just before she sailed for England:

"We have never heard from our Jock, Rose. If you were convinced of his death, something could be done with the house, but if you will look after it—perhaps, some day, Jock will come home again."

No one believed that Jock Frost would come home again. And yet one morning his far-away cousin Rose awoke with the sun in her blue eyes and with a thrill in her heart.

"I just have a feeling that Jock may come home today, and it will never do to ignore the family tradition and let him knock and find the house closed! I will tell mother at breakfast, if she does not need me, I will go over right away and get ready for Jock." So Rose, brighter than usual, confessed to her mother.

"I do not need you, Rose, and you may take Hester, if you want her. There is not very much to do today," said the mother.

So Rose and Hester spent the day working in the big house. At five o'clock the two women could say that the house was ready for any returned wanderer, or any casual guest that might appear.

There were pleasant fires burning on the hearths, and the glow of lamp-light and firelight sparkled on the brightly polished window panes. In the small sitting room was a gateleg table spread with a linen cloth on which were placed the old Chelsea china and polished old silver.

"You must be terrible sure, Miss Rose," said Hester.

"I do feel sure, Hester," said Rose confidently, "and for that reason I am going home to change my dress. I will be back in half an hour."

"If anybody comes, Miss Rose, there ain't much for 'em to eat," contended Hester.

"I will bring something over—perhaps Sam will kill a chicken and I will bring a loaf of fresh bread."

Hester hurried around during the absence of her young mistress and had a good fire in the kitchen range when Rose returned with a large basket. "Mother has put in all sorts of good things, Hester, and I know that she thinks I'm crazy!"

"She thought you was crazy the night you dreamed that some one was robbing the hen roost—and when your pa and Sam went out, sure enough they caught that furriner from the river bottom—remember?"

"Yes, indeed," laughed Rose, and her laughter continued as the front door knocker sounded smartly.

"Well, here he is!" declared Hester, whipping off her kitchen apron and disclosing a frilly white one beneath it. Then she hurried to the front door. She did not notice that Rose Frost had fled to the large front parlor, where she sat shivering behind the great fire screen.

Hester opened the front door and discovered a tall, bearded man, wearing a large gray coat and a hat pulled low over his dark eyes.

"Oh, howdy do, Mister John," said the woman cheerily. "We been lookin' for you. I guess—" The stranger entered and, removing his hat, but hung it on the rack, and then turned to her.

"A room, if you have it, please," the man said sharply, and then started up the front stairway. Hester trailing after. When they reached the top of the long stairway the man paused, as if to let Hester pass ahead of him, and in doing so faced the large oil portrait of Judge Frost's wife.

For an instant he paused there, as if uncertain, staring at the dignified, white-haired old lady of the picture, and then, with a strangled cry of "Mother—mother!" he fell forward down the stairs to the very bottom.

Hester rushed away for the nearby doctor, while Rose brought restoratives. She was working tenderly over the white-faced man when Doctor Weed arrived with his chauffeur. They carried the fainting man up to the room that used to be Jock Frost's, and laid him on the freshly-made bed. Then the doctor wrote a prescription, sent Cyrus to the drug store, and then went out and spoke to Rose.

"It's your Cousin Jock, all right. Think he must have had a shock during the war—falling down stairs was a restorative shock. He woke up a few minutes ago and said, 'Hello, Doc!' Then he asked for his father and Violet—so guess it's up to you to tell him, Rose."

The Frost tradition still holds good. The doors are always hospitably open, and Jock Frost, one of the leading citizens, often says to his wife, Rose, "We must keep up the Frost tradition, my dear. If I had found an empty house that night, goodness knows what might have happened!"

Your MODEL T FORD is still a good car

THE Model T Ford led the motor industry for twenty years because of its sturdy worth, reliability and economy. Those same reasons continue to make it a good car.

As a matter of fact, nearly one-fourth of all the automobiles in use today are Model T Fords. Millions of them can be driven two, three and even five more years with reasonable care and proper replacements. Figures show that the average life is seven years.

Don't sacrifice your Model T, therefore, but take it to the Ford dealer and have him estimate on the cost of putting it in AI shape. A very small expenditure may be the means of giving you thousands of miles of additional service.

For a labor charge of $20 to $25 you can have your motor and transmission completely overhauled. This price includes new bearings, reboring cylinders and any other work necessary. Parts are extra.

Valves can be ground and carbon removed for $3 to $4. The cost of tightening all main bearings is only $6. The labor charge for overhauling the front axle is $4.50 to $5—rear axle assembly, $5.75 to $7.

New universal joint will be installed for a labor charge of $3. Brake shoes relined for $1.50. Rear spring and perches rebushed for $1.75. The cost of overhauling the starting motor is $3. A labor charge of approximately $2.50 covers the overhauling of the generator.

It will pay you, therefore, to see your Ford dealer and have him put your Model T in good running order. By doing so you will protect and maintain the investment you have in your car and get months and years of reliable transportation at a very low cost per mile.

Mammoth Circus Coming To Kalamazoo

The Robbins Bros. Big 4 Ring Circus, the largest in the world giving a street parade will appear at Kalamazoo on May 10, 1929.

The big circus this year is crowded with features and will present the greatest performance of its history. No able among the features offered is the Human Fly—the importation from Europe. This act, consisting of men and women who act as human flies or ceiling walkers have astounded all Europe during the past winter. Imagine to yourself these flies walking on the ceiling of the tent up side down—defying all the laws of gravitation. No one has ever seen so startling, death defying performance in the history of sensational acts.

Two mammoth pageants, requiring three hundred people in its cast of characters; three herds of elephants; a mammoth hippopotamus just imported from Africa; Ponca Bill's Wild West Shows; fifty Sioux Indians from off the reservation; fifty cow boys; Japanese families recently brought over from Japan; Arabian Tumblers from Teheran, Arabia, forty clowns with the highest salaried clown in the world as producer; Count Gimmerjotta's dancing horses; acrobatic acts; trained dogs and ponies; parade of nations which for oriental splendor exceeds anything produced up to the present time; 200 wild animals; 400 horses; 600 men to the show; wonders galore; feats without a parallel.

The circus is one of the most successful in the country, having a half a century played principally in the east and is now making its second western tour enlarged at such an extent that it stands in front rank. It is worth while in every way.

Tribute to Journalism

The journalist is always working against time, and I sometimes think there is no more wonderful achievement of our modern civilization than the production of a newspaper.—Neville Chamberlain.

Futile Suggestion

Things continually come to remind us of how much lovelier and more satisfactory the world would be if each person kept his hands and tongue busy with his own work.—Hopkins (Mo.) Journal.

But Man Gets None

When man is born people sympathize with the mother; when he marries they sympathize with the bride; when he dies they sympathize with the widow.—San Francisco Chronicle.

Behind It All

We may laugh at the negro who stole a watch "to look respectable," but the same thought, worked in a wholesale way, has been the foundation of many a blue book status.—New Orleans Times-Picayune.

Clouded Evenings

The reckless optimism behind unsafe pleasures or illicit pursuits is usually a radiant morn followed by an overclouded evening, says an observer of life, writing in the American Magazine.

The Huntsman

A story from down East tells of a hunter who tracked a "deer" for three hours only to find when he came up with it that it was a pig, but who told him it was a pig?—Detroit News.

Why Not Eat?

When hungry, why should I not eat without harm, as I drink water when I am thirsty? Drinking water is said to be good for me. Why is not eating?—E. W. Howe's Monthly.

Ideal, Also Extraordinary

The ideal wife is one who can love a husband even when he can't make enough to pay easy payments for them to keep just a tip ahead of their friends.—Chicinnati Enquirer.

The Cause of It All

The women are crazy after the men. The men are crazy after the women. And that condition has caused 99 per cent of the tragedies of all history.—Atchison Globe.

Wind Hits Audience

To let the audience "think with the actors" during a storm scene in a London thriller, a wind machine is turned on those sitting on the main floor.

Life on a Treadmill

Many a dweller in dreams thinks a philosopher writing in the American Magazine passes his life on a treadmill and gets nowhere.

No Federal Law

The prohibition of women wearing men's clothes was a part of the old common law and does not appear in the federal statutes.

"Big game" is an elastic term, and is generally understood to include all wild mammals larger than a common fox.

Many Types of Animals

There are approximately 700,000 species of animal life which have been described up to the present time.

No Perfectly White Eagle

There is no species of eagle that is white. There are probably albino eagles.

Fine Thought

A venerable old gentleman had been fined $100 for sitting in a cinema theater, and Cortlandt Bleeker philosophized over the episode at the Knickerbocker club. "A woman," Mr. Bleeker concluded, "is as old as she looks. A man isn't old till he stops looking."

Erosion

A Concordia young woman finds nothing more obnoxious than people who accost her affectionately with a pat on the cheek. "They must think," she declared angrily, "that I have nothing to do all day but resurface my face."—Concordia (Kan.) Blade.

WEEK OF MAY 5

During the early part of the week of May 5th there will be a storm centered over Michigan. Accompanying this low pressure we are expecting there will be some local rains mostly in the form of thunder showers. Another feature of this storm center will be the dangerously strong winds. On the Great Lakes there will be severe gales, while inland the winds will do much to whip fruit trees of their fruit and blossoms.

Thunder storms of a somewhat severe nature will continue throughout the state during the first half of the week. There will be induced by the decrease of the relative humidity and increase of the temperature.

While the heat will have reached a high degree by the middle of the week, by Thursday there will be a sudden reverse and the closing days of the week will show temperatures decidedly lower.

Best Days This Week

For Farming: May 8 and 9, 7:30 to 9:30 a. m. and 2:50 to 5:20 p. m. For fishing: May 5. For baking: May 6 and 7.

Castoria is a comfort when Baby is fretful. No sooner taken than the little one is at ease. If restless, a few drops soon bring contentment. No harm done, for Castoria is a baby remedy, meant for babies. Perfectly safe to give the youngest infant; you have the doctors' word for that! It is a vegetable product and you could use it every day. But it's in an emergency that Castoria means most. Some night when constipation must be relieved—or colic pains—or other suffering. Never be without it; some mothers keep an extra bottle, unopened, to make sure there will always be Castoria in the house. It is effective for older children, too; read the book that comes with it.

JACK and JILL

By CLIFFORD WEBB

(Copyright, 1928, the Central Press Association, Inc.)

It was momentarily significant, that little in-drawn "hah!" It conveyed a deeper meaning even than Professor Le Tarte knew. It is doubtful, however, even if he had known that it signified murder, that it would have induced him to forego his chance at the $500 promised him. For the professor was hard up, as usual. He needed that five hundred. Anger, despair, and doubt—three of the disgraces and despoilers of life, surged up in the heart of Jill Stuart. Each fought for control. Blind anger gripped her one moment at the thought of Jack's betrayal of her again. Yes, again, she told herself, for if this story proved true—if he had gone to meet that woman, as Le Tarte declared—then he had

Thus are the most important events in life often determined. There is always an instant when the issue hangs in the balance. Had Jill taken the automatic that night she would have been a killer, in all probability. For an automatic 25, at close range, is a deadly weapon, even in the hands of a woman. "Listen to me, Jill," said Mike Sweeney, as she inserted her lithe body beneath the big steering wheel of the limousine, and Jill settled into the seat at her side. "This affair has a funny look—Jack getting a hurry-up call at 3 o'clock, taking him out of town, and then at 5 Le Tarte calling you up with the information that Jack is meeting Nita Ravelle at the Casino tonight. Seems yo'ah just unda'hooded th' suhcum-stawnces!" "Probably not," observed Mike, dryly, and then added: "Suhcum-stawnces certainly do alter cases a heap much sometimes!" The big limousine, during this conversation, had been speeding along at 40 miles an hour. Since the Casino was 10 miles west, and one mile south, of the main highway, Mike knew they must be close to the detour. "That's it—that green light on th' left!" said Jill, suddenly, the first word she had uttered since re-entering the car at the drug store. As she spoke, Mike saw the light and slowed down. A moment later she saw where the detour made off from the main thoroughfare. She gave the wheel a turn and the car sped around the curve and onto a newly-graveled, but well-packed, road. She shot the rays of a powerful searchlight into the darkness ahead, disclosing a wall of rock on one side and a deep gorge on the other. "Not just the place to do any fancy skidding, nor very much careless driving," remarked Mike, meditatively. "There's been several tragedies along this gorge, I've heard," said Le Tarte, looking a trifle nervously at the one hand with which Mike was holding the steering wheel. "Doesn't take much sometimes—just a stone—or—er—something to throw a car outta control!" "And think what the gossips would say," chirped the irrepressible Mike, "if the Sweeney car, with that Sweeney girl' and Jill Stuart, a perfectly respectable married woman, and Professor—ugh!" She registered a shudder, and then, as if to lend realism to it, clapped the hand that had been holding the wheel to her head. The professor saw the wheel shake and—he didn't have to register any shudder. The cold sweat that broke out all over his body made him shiver like a man with the ague. "Miss—S-Sweeney-ey!" he squealed, and then choked, almost inarticulate. "F-for God's s-sake, don't be—be foolhardy!"

been guilty on previous counts. At this thought, despair would clutch her, for if the father of her children— And then, once more there would creep in the ever-consoling doubt which, in this case, had reversed its usual meaning and signified hope. Le Tarte had telephoned. Jill had been told that Jack was to meet Nita Ravelle early that evening in the cabaret of the Casino. She knew that parties from towns within a radius of thirty miles feregathered there. It was a replica of the big city night club. Suppers were served at prices on a par with city club prices.

When the professor had suggested going out to the Casino, Jill had refused. But he had persisted. She could, he told her, take her friend, McGuffey, along as a medium of safety and propriety for herself. "Very well," she had finally told him, "I'll go just to prove that you are mistaken. I'll get someone and pick you up at the Central at 6 o'clock."

Where, she wondered, could she find Ann? Then it suddenly occurred to her that Mike Sweeney was the logical one to take along on this trip. Clara had told her, immediately upon her arrival home from shopping, about Jack having been "called out of town and might be gone all night." Did Clara know where Mr. Stuart was going—to what town? No, the girl told her. She had been in the nursery, Jennie and she, with the children, when the telephone rang. Mr. Stuart had answered. Then he had called her and said he was going out of town and for her to tell Mrs. Stuart. He had then departed. That was all.

Jill took down the receiver and asked for the Sweeney number. A servant answered and she asked for Miss Sweeney. Two minutes passed. Then Mike's voice came to her over the wire, clear and musical. "Yes, this is Miss Sweeney." "Oh, Mike!" exclaimed Jill, with a hysterical sharpness. "Dear friend, I'm in th' most terrible trouble! Listen!"

Then, in a rush of words that fairly tumbled over each other in her anxiety to explain as quickly as possible, Jill acquainted Mike with what Le Tarte had told her, and the message Jack had left with Clara for her. "What, in heaven's name, Mike, shall I do?" she asked at the finish. "Go out there yourself, as quick as you possibly can. Make sure he's there to meet her!" advised Mike, instantly. Then she added: "If you want me I'll take you out in our limousine. It's fast and comfortable. If Le Tarte goes along he can sit in the back seat!"

"That's splendid of you, Mike!" exclaimed Jill, with fervor. "I was going to ask you to go with me, for I wouldn't, of course, go alone with Le Tarte. When can you be here?" "In 20 minutes, or 25 at the most!" replied the girl who Jill had hated, or thought she did, only a month or so before. "S'long!" Jill hurriedly changed her afternoon shopping suit for a modest evening gown and drew a tight-fitting turban over her bobbed head, and donned her sealskin coat. Then she opened a small drawer of her wardrobe trunk, and took out a 25-calibre automatic pistol.

For a full minute she stood there with the pistol in her hand, considering the advisability of taking it with her. Suddenly something seemed to warn her against it. She laid the gun back in the drawer.

to me, if Jack knew he was meeting Nita there he'd have taken along something besides his emergency flask, which holds only half a pint, and which, you say, Clara saw him put in his pocket. Jack knows Nita's capacity. That half a pint makes just about two drinks for her. "Maybe she's taking th' liquor," said Jill, hoping in her heart that Mike's suggestion of a frame-up would turn out correct.

The professor was waiting at the Central drug store, all dressed up in evening togger, when Jill entered and gave him the signal to follow. She thought he betrayed a little chagrin when he saw Mike and the limousine. But if he was disappointed he gave no further sign, merely inclining his head as Mike indicated the spacious luxuriousness in the rear, and Jill resumed her seat in front. The car was not divided by any partition, however, so he was not cut off from the conversation. "How did you come to learn, professor, that Jack and Nita were to meet at the Casino?"

Mike Sweeney shot the question from the right-hand corner of her mouth, her gaze fixed steadily on the road ahead. It was the first word that had been spoken since the car had pulled away from the curb in front of the drug store. The professor perked up, every faculty instantly on the alert. He had been lounging in the corner of the rear seat. Now he changed to a seat close to that of the driver. "How did ah leahn'n?" he repeated, in the very poorly executed southern drawl and dialect he frequently affected. "Why, the lady herse'f in-foh'med me!"

"What time was it when she in-foh'med you?" quizzed the persistent Mike, who, when she wanted to know anything, asked right out loud, without any hesitancy. "Somewhah close to foah this afternoon," replied the professor, guardedly. "Did she telephone?" asked Mike. "Oh, no, it was in th' post office. We just happened to meet."

CHAPTER XXXVIII

"Did she tell you to call Jill and post her?" queried Mike, just as if she expected a straightforward answer. "I should say not!" exploded the professor, his voice a raucous bleat. "She told me not to tell!"

"But knowing quite well you would tell, just the same," supplemented Mike, and he caught the satirical note in her voice as she turned her head his way for a fleeting second. "Oh, no, you're wrong, Miss Sweeney, dead wrong!" asserted the professor, so earnestly that he forgot for the moment his drawl and dialect. Then he seemed to note his dereliction and added hastily: "Oh, yes, indeed, yo'ah entiah'ly wrong, Ah'm shuah!"

"All right, then, Professor," acquiesced Mike. "We'll say I'm wrong. But what I don't understand is: Why should Nita Ravelle tell you she expected to meet Jack Stuart out at the Casino tonight. Are you her guardian?" "Oh, no, not hah guardian, Miss Sweeney!" protested the professor, watching his "r's" as well as his words. "But Nita and I ah close f'wends an' when Ah asked hah to hav' dinnah this evening at Prince Wong's, she cah'lessly remah'ked that she had an engagement with Jack Stua'ht at th' Casino. Nothing unusual about th' mattah at all, if themselves looking out on a scene, the like of which even Mike, who had been to Europe twice, and had looked upon many bizzare and unique spectacles, had never gazed upon. At the far end of the room, 200 feet long and 100 feet wide, was a mammoth stage, now hidden by a splendid curtain. In the middle a space 25 feet in width was reserved for dancing.

The floor was like that of a bowling alley, and as smooth as glass—a perfect dancing floor. On each side were no less than 50 round mahogany tables, at which six could sit with comfort. Along the walls were ranged great leather divans, while on the walls were hung splendid paintings in magnificent gilt frames. The table chairs were all heavily upholstered in real leather.

An orchestra of a dozen pieces was located near the center of the room on one side. Probably 50 waiters, in white uniforms, were in attendance on the no fewer than 150 guests, more than half of the tables being occupied by parties of from two to six at a table.

At the moment of the trio's entrance, a woman was singing to the air of the orchestra, while out on the floor two dancers, a man and a woman, or girl, were gyrating through the mazes of some new-fangled Apache dance.

It was the singularity of the costumes of these dancers that riveted attention, costumes, it might be said, that would defy description. Not because of their elaborate splendor, but because of their amazing, startling inadequacy.

It was their dance, however, that caught Jill's artistic eye, and for a moment or two she ever forgot the real reason for her presence there. Both dancers were beautiful in face and in form, the man a light replica of the Apollo Belvidere, and the girl a Psyche, but a Psyche of round, slender limbs and a lithe body.

Jill gasped at the marvelous feats of strength performed by this slender girl. The man, though slim, must have weighed 150 pounds, and yet the girl tossed him in the air, caught and swung him around as if he were a child of six.

"I don't call that a dance," said Professor Le Tarte, in response to Jill's outburst of admiration. "It's more like a juggling act—the juggling of each other. I think our dance has it backed clear off the floor for real grace and beauty of motion!" Jill flashed him a contemptuous look, modified by pity.

"Our dance doesn't come even within speaking distance of this!" she declared in all honesty. She was perfectly willing to take the credit she knew was her due, but she was too much of an artist herself not to realize the wide gulf that lay between this girl's artistry and her own.

They had been escorted, almost immediately upon their arrival, to a table close to the dance floor, a position that enabled Jill to get an excellent view, not only of the dancers, but of guests at tables, as well. Suddenly her heart seemed almost to cease beating. She was looking straight into the eyes of Nita Ravelle. At the same table, his back and the side of his head visible to Jill, sat Jack.

WOMEN TO OPEN BUILDING MAY 14

Senior women of the University of Michigan, who, aiding the alumnae, helped make the new University of Michigan League building possible, will derive benefit from their work, at least during their last six weeks on the campus. This has been made possible by the plan which calls for the formal opening of the new building May 4 instead of next fall, as was intended formerly.

Dedication of the new $1,000,000 structure will be left until Alumnae day, one of the events of the commencement program, which will take place June 14, but the building will be placed in use after May 4.

Preparations for the opening are well under way, according to Mrs. W. D. Henderson, executive secretary of the Alumnae council, and Mrs. Zoe B. Bolles of New York, recently engaged as business manager, has already started work.

The opening will take the form of an afternoon and evening reception, with contributors to the building fund as invited guests. Members of the Alumnae Council, the board of governors of the building and of the Women's league will co-operate in receiving.

Fully instructed guides will conduct visitors through the building throughout the afternoon and evening. The opening, however, does not include provision for the serving of meals nor for use of the sleeping accommodations.

Entertainment will include a special program by the Girls' Glee club and a dance drama, from 4 to 5 o'clock in the afternoon and from 8:30 to 9:30 o'clock in the evening. The Freshman Girls' Glee club will also provide entertainment in the form of a concert in the assembly hall in the afternoon.

A formal dance will be held in the ballroom in the evening. Senior girls will be given the preference in the distribution of invitations to this event.

Formal opening of the theater, which seats 700 persons, and is generally regarded as a step toward an all-campus theater of double that size will take place Monday evening, May 6. At that time, the Comedy club, the oldest dramatic organization of the campus, will offer "Granite," Paul Stephenson of Grand Rapids, who has previously directed campus dramatic presentations, will direct the cast of this play. The play will run throughout the week.

The Play Production society, another campus dramatic organization, has engaged the theater for the second week, and will offer "The Beggar on Horseback." This society also has engaged the theater for four nights each week during the first seven weeks of the summer session.

Miss Amy Loomis, former dramatic star of the campus, has been named director of the theater, it is announced. Inasmuch as the theater serves a vital need, it is intended that it shall be used for all organizations, preference being given campus societies, of course.

Dedication of the building will be the big event of Alumnae day. Secretary of Commerce Robert P. Lamont, donor of the largest amount to the building fund, and Senator Arthur H. Vandenberg will be the speakers.

Poems That Live

THE TRYST

She stood at the gate in the twilight,
'Twas the lovers favorite hour;
And spreading o'er all were the crimson rays
Of the sun, the king of power.

Brown were her eyes, and most patient,
Most patient and trusting were they;
And her dark red hair seemed darker still
In the fast receding day.

About her all Nature seemed quiet,
No sound broke the solemn hour,
As she calmly awaited his coming,
His coming to her bower.

Kissed by the rays of the dying sun
As the zephyr kissed the bud,
She sees a man approach with a pall
As she calmly chews her cud!

Hawaii Lauds Their Courage

When volcanologists warned the Hawaiian islands recently that a tidal wave 100 feet high was due to engulf the islands, virtually the entire population is reported to have fled to the hilltops. But two California girls, Helen Armstrong and Ruth Shanks, refused to leave the lowlands, preferring to stay behind to look after things while urging their friends to seek safety. The fact that the wave failed to materialize didn't lessen their bravery in the eyes of the islanders. Above, the pair snapped on their arrival in Los Angeles.

French Omelet Potato Chips

Rhubarb Cake Coffee

Today's Recipes

French Omelet—Beat six eggs until the whites and yolks are blended. Add six tablespoons hot water, three-fourths teaspoon salt and one-eighth teaspoon pepper. Pour the mixture into a hot buttered frying pan, and as it cooks, lift constantly with a fork to let the uncooked part run underneath. When evenly cooked, remove to hot plate. Serve at once with this cheese sauce: Melt one-fourth cup butter in saucepan, remove from heat and stir in one-fourth cup flour, one-half teaspoon salt, few grains pepper and one-fourth teaspoon paprika. Gradually add two cups milk and cook until sauce boils, stirring constantly. After a minute or two of cooking, remove from flame and stir in one-fourth cup grated cheese.

Rhubarb Cake—Mix a cupful of flour, teaspoon baking powder, half teaspoon salt and two tablespoons brown sugar well. Rub a quarter cup of shortening into the flour mixture. Put an egg into a cup and add enough milk to make a half cupful. Add the milk and egg to the flour mixture and mix well. Put the batter into a shallow, greased pan, cover with shredded rhubarb—shredded quite coarsely—and sprinkle with a half cupful of sugar. Bake in a hot oven for from 20 to 25 minutes.

SUGGESTIONS

New Spring Curtains
Enticing curtain fabrics are shown this spring with fast-dyed color on white grounds. In keeping with the vogue for polka dots in dress is the dotted curtain, as for example: coin dots of blue, red, gold or green, on white marquisette. This is most attractive in the ruffled tie-back type. Cream, white or ecru marquisette, sprinkled with tiny self-color dots in criss-cross style, also is charming for tie-backs. Organdie having a permanent finish is good looking when the plain fabric in rose, blue, gold, green or orchid is made up of self-ruffles and insets of printed organdie for a note of contrast.

Plaid marquisette in blue and white, rose and white, or gold, green or red with white, is an excellent choice for the cottage type of curtain.

If the vacuum cleaner is to give good service the dust bag must be kept clean.

Use scissors for cutting meat, fish or vegetables for salads.

The prescribed distance for placing the plates when setting the table is 22 inches, measuring from center of one plate to center of next one.

It is better to add salt to the meat after it is partially cooked because, when added when the meat is raw it draws out the juices.

Dust Often

It is easier to keep painted wood-work clean by dusting often than by washing, and it preserves the painted surface. It pays to wipe soiled places around door knobs and window sills as soon as dirt appears.

Son: "Father, does the big fishes eat sardines?"
Father: "Yes, my son."

College Honorary To Publish Book

Sphinx, honorary women's activity society at Michigan State college, has outlined a series of spring term activities that will be of great service to the institution as a whole. The plans for the coming term were discussed at a meeting and committees to take charge of the various projects were appointed.

The society is planning to publish a book of all Michigan State College songs some time during the spring term. This anthology will contain all present songs of Michigan State and will also contain two new songs that were written recently by a former member of the faculty. The prize-winning Eta Omicron song will also appear in the book.

Gladys Traynor of Milwaukee, Wis., is chairman of the committee in charge of compiling the song book. She is assisted by Marion Woodworth, Glen Elyn, Ill.; Kathryn Faner, Goodrich; Jean Stokes, Grand Rapids, and Myrta Susan Coons, East Lansing. Miss Lucille Morris of Lansing is writing and preparing music for several more campus songs that will appear in the new book.

Women Form Aero Body

Articles of association have been filed at Detroit with the Wayne county Clerk by the Women's National Aeronautical Association of the United States. The purpose of the organization is announced as the promotion of the interests of aeronautics and aviation. Offices of the association are listed at 1220 Free Press building, with the following list of officers: President, Mrs. Orra H. Blackmore; vice president, Mrs. L. M. Gardening Is Good For Children

"One of the pleasantest things for a child to do in the spring is to make a garden," reads an article in "Children, The Parents' Magazine." "Besides keeping him active in the outdoors, gardening promotes industry and pride in achievement and teaches the child at first hand the miracle of growth," the article continues.

"Isn't there a sunny space in the backyard that could be devoted to this enterprise? Or perhaps the owner of a vacant lot in the neighborhood would consent to have some of this land tilled. If two or more children make their gardens together, the competition stimulates better effort.

"For a flower garden, two or three kinds of flowers are enough. Zinnias, dwarf marigolds, alyssum, cornflowers and California poppies are varieties successfully raised by children. If vegetables are grown, concentrate also on two or three kinds. Tomatoes grown from plants started indoors, bush beans and carrots are recommended. The vegetable gardener should have a border of flowers to make his plot more attractive."

Sally's Sallies

A timely swoon by a giddy young thing is often only a feint.

A new baby had arrived at Billy's house and a neighbor was asking him about it.

"That sure is fine to have another playmate," said the neighbor. "Is it a boy or a girl?"

"Aw, I guess it's a girl," said Billy darkly, "I seen them puttin' powder on it."

MATTERS OF MOMENT

It seems to me that this country is always facing a crisis. If it isn't one thing it's another. No sooner had we decided officially that it was all right to shell a Canadian rum boat on the high seas, down a Frenchman and keep an Irish woman in prison for life for having scrubbed the floor of a hotel in which Rothstein was shot, than Vice president Curtis calls upon the state department to draw up a chair for his sister to sit on while she gets a bite of dinner. Now we're all of a flutter about the new crisis, so that we really have no time to decide whether a congressman from South Carolina can be compelled to occupy an office next to a black representative from Chicago.

Charley Curtis and I are both from Kansas, and I'm inclined to sympathize with him in his 21 demands and 14 points relating to the social crisis in Washington.

Out where Charley and I came from there has always been what President Wilson used to call a proud punctilio about where to sit at the table. The master of the house always sat at the head of the table, and the mistress's right the children spread fanwise, beginning with the eldest son, by right of primogeniture. On the opposite side were ranged the hired men, counter-clockwise and in the order of their seniority in service. In the southern counties of Kansas a delicate question sometimes arose when a colored hired man outranked a white hand from South Carolina. The question was usually settled at forty paces, as Mr. Curtis will remember, I'm sure. The weapons were milking stools and pitchforks, and may the best man win.

Are we for or against the Russians? Is Calles a red, as he was two years ago, or has he turned white in a single night? Are we going to sink 'em without a trace in Aurora as well as in the gulf, and who owns the South Pole?

Did that Mexican government ever salute the American flag, as we ordered it to, several years ago; how much shall Germany pay; who did the Chicago massacre and why; who owns Yap; how much support shall we give the Bank of England if Byrd has to pay custom duties on his planes in Antarctica?

Seems to me we might just as well postpone these vexing questions, and concentrate on finding a suitable chair for Charley Curtis' sister to sit in while she eats. I'd like to see this question properly settled this summer, so we can pitch in and dig that Nicaragua canal in the fall.

How to Achieve Beauty

By MME. HELENA RUBINSTEIN

TODAY BELONGS TO GRANDMOTHER

By Madame Rubinstein
Today is the day of the grandmother—oh, yes, it is, and all you who think that grandmother belongs in the past, with her knitting and her spectacles, sitting alone by the hearthside—you're wrong. Her day is now, and it is a day of youth, of second girlhood, perhaps, in company with all the other young people of various ages.

Grandmother has a better chance at happiness and self-expression—good looks, too—than some of the rest of you. She is free now. Her life work, for the most part, is over. And after years of child raising and grandchildren raising, she has time to give to herself.

Why should she not think of herself and her looks? She has charm and wit to impart—a much more interesting person than many people guess—with wisdom and poise as well, of the soundest kind, that comes from a long list of activity and a wide range of observation. Hear her talk sometimes, and learn to value anew the gifts that the years can bring.

For grandmothers are not "old" any more. They have years to their credit, but they are not aged and waiting for death to release them. They are living life to the full—"going in" for things—and getting out among people.

One of the most fascinating people I know is a young grandmother of 60. She has snow-white hair, bobbed and becomingly waved. Her figure is slender and young, and her skin surprisingly free from wrinkles. Her days are busy—filled with a round of social activities and engagements. She keeps herself constantly active because she likes to stay young.

One of her favorite pursuits is dancing—not simple, easy ballroom dancing, either, but joyful, rhythmic dancing. She belongs to a class of

"young things" from 40 to 60 years of age, and she bends and stretches, skips and bounds, relaxes and moves among them with the utmost grace and freedom. It is a joy and a revelation to see this "young woman" of 60, who has recently trained herself in the pleasant form of exercises land on her two feet, lightly and firmly, after a difficult leap, while some of the younger recruits, of barely 40, stumble and slip about awkwardly.

Grandmothers everywhere are going in for beauty culture. Sensibly. They have too much common sense and good taste to go in for it foolishly. Heavy make-ups of paint and powder are not for the woman whose skin is beginning to show lines and wrinkles. They emphasize its defects.

No. The modern grandmother takes healthy skin care. She knows the value of rich nourishing creams and stimulants. And because she has character and strength of will to take care regularly—to persist in it faithfully, she often gets better results than the younger woman whose skin treatment is haphazard and careless.

Beauty shops today number among their clients many, many old-young grandmothers, who have learned to find joy and relaxation in taking facial treatments. It gives them something to do—something worth while and progressive to occupy the moments that they might find dull and empty. Not that there are many such moments for the busy, modern lady of any age. For life is too rich—too full of a number of things for any woman to let it pass by while she wishes regretfully that she might enjoy it better.

Age has little or nothing to do with beauty or happiness—it merely changes the kind of beauty and happiness that we may find. Take a lesson in living from the modern grandmother and see how easy it is to stay young.

Wild Animals Roam American Forests

Robert V. Stewart, chief forester of the Department of Agriculture at Washington, has declared that the American forests are again becoming a paradise for wild animals. With the exception of the grizzly bear and the caribou, all animals are increasing in number.

Deer are increasing 5 per cent faster than hunters can kill them. More than 700,000, it is estimated, are roaming in the national forests. Means are being sought to keep the number of the herd within the feeding capacity of the forests.

Elk are also increasing faster than they are being killed off, with 75,000 elk grazing today in national forests. Antelope are increasing in their numbers at about 10 per cent annually. It is estimated 8,000 of them are on the national ranges.

More than 8,000 moose are existant despite the invasions of hunters. Beavers are thriving in the west, and nearly 200,000 of them are listed in the animal census.

Black and brown bears now number about 52,000, having increased 10 per cent annually. But outside of 2,500 in Alaska, only 800 grizzly bears are known to be in American forests. Only 35 caribou are listed in the records of the forest service.

When you get a "bargain" in seed you get a whole lot MORE than you "Bargained for" in TROUBLE. Here is one example and there are hundreds just like it:

A farmer paid $18 per bushel for this: Timothy 55, sweet clover 18, alfalfa 10, medium clover 5 and alsike 3 1/2%. DIRT over 4% and WEEDS nearly 4%. There were 15 kinds of weed seed. The actual value of the bushel was $7.30 and he paid $18. The weed seed was free. Do you want some at ANY price?

This Was NOT Farm Bureau Seed

Look out for red and green stain on seed—it means it is dangerous for you to use in Michigan. The Farm Bureau knows where every seed it sells you comes from.
