November 19 and dandelions, roses and other spring flowers still blooming fine in Michigan and the weather fine. No ice needed and very little coal, B. V. D's still popular and rubbers and overcoats still in storage. Little food needed and the cost of living down to a minimum. Fine for those who might have to buy but pretty tough on those who must make their living from sales. Well it may not be ever thus.

The County Odd Fellow Association met in Gobles last Thursday and were royally entertained by the local chapter and the Rebekahs. A large delegation was present. End of the Mamelukes

The Mamelukes were slaves brought into Egypt from the Caucasus and formed into a standing army. In 1254 the army raised one of its members to the supreme power. Mamelukes ruled over Egypt until 1517, when they were overthrown by Selim I, sultan of Turkey. The country was ruled by 25 Mameluke beys under a Turkish viceroy. In 1811 the pasha of Egypt, by a wholesale massacre, annihilated the Mamelukes.

Interesting Gold Nugget

In an Australian museum is a gold nugget made into two flags, the stars and stripes and the other representing the British tri-color. These flags are probably the smallest in existence, being only half an inch in length and three-eighths of an inch wide. This trophy was so made by an American-born miner and was the first nugget discovered in one of the celebrated gold fields in Australia.

Edible Bird's Nest

The nest of the selangave is valuable as food. It is used as a delicacy by the Chinese. It has the shape and size of a half teacup, is attached to the rock in the interior of a cave and has the appearance of fibrous gelatin. It is composed of a mucilaginous substance or isinglass, secreted by special glands, and is not, as was thought, that made from a glutinous seaweed.

Cyclonic Belts

The most advanced or progressive parts of the world are the regions of cyclonic storms. Two chief features of cyclonic regions are rainfall in moderate abundance at all seasons and weather subject to marked changes every few days. Most of the United States, together with southern Canada and most of Europe, lies in the great northern cyclonic belt.

Device for Heating Drinks

Asleep in Jesus, blessed sleep
From which none ever wake to weep,
A calm and undisturbed repose,
Unbroken by the last of foes.
Asleep in Jesus, far from thee
Thy kindred and their graves may be,
But thine is still a blessed sleep
From which none ever wake to weep.

MICHIGAN FARMERS PAYING SEED LOANS

Although their drought relief loans are not due and payable until Nov. 30 Michigan farmers have started to repay the government, officials at the department of agriculture reported this week.

When the books of the drought relief loan were balanced Oct. 1, they showed Michigan farmers had repaid $1,792.39 on notes which do not mature until the end of next month. Sizable repayments have been made by other Michigan farmers this month but the total will not be made public until the books are balanced Nov. 1.

Farmers in other states also were said to be paying their drought relief loans in advance. None of the notes became due until Oct. 1, yet on Sept. 30 the department of agriculture reported it had received $1,239,146.64 to apply on the loans.

Loans to farmers by the government for the purchase of seed, feed and fertilizer last spring totaled $47,042,022.

"The repayment of this large amount before any of it was due is very gratifying," said Secretary Hyde. "It justifies the faith of the government in advancing this money to the farmers who needed it to tide them over a period when they could not get money elsewhere. The early repayments have been profitable for the farmers, also, as it has allowed them to reduce their interest charges."

The seed loan office is making refunds every day of unearned interest. The farmers paid the interest when the money was borrowed and when they pay the loan before due the unearned interest is returned to them.

The last loans to come due this year will mature Nov. 30. They are loans made in Michigan and 18 other states.

Chicago Stock Show to Be Biggest in History

Early entries pouring into the headquarters of the International Live Stock Exposition, to be held at the Chicago Stock Yards this year November 23 to December 5, give assurance of one of the largest displays of livestock and educational agricultural exhibits in its history. So reports B. H. Heide, secretary-manager of the exposition.

The coming 32nd anniversary of this world's largest exposition of the meat making breeds of livestock will open its doors upon the mammoth International amphitheatre and 22 adjoining buildings on the first Saturday following Thanksgiving. Each day and evening will be crowded with events of education, inspiration, and entertainment to the visitors from town and country who combine to make the International Live Stock Exposition the most cosmopolitan agricultural show in the land.

Officials of the International Grain and Hay Show, a department of the Live Stock Exposition, but in itself the world's largest competitive display of small seeds, hay, and grain, state that in spite of the drought in many sections of the country this year, they look for the largest entry in the history of this event.

They also assert that samples of wheat from as far remote points of the globe as three of the important wheat producing states of Australia are enroute to the 1931 show.

According to the management, the dead line on accepting entries for the individual livestock classes of the exhibition will be November 1; for the Grain and Hay Show, November 10; and for that spectacular and highly practical side of the exposition, the carload lot classes of commercial cattle, sheep, and swine, November 21.

Farm Co-operatives Vital to Growers

In a recent address Charles S. Wilson, a member of the Federal Farm Board, emphasized the fact that to get benefits from farm relief, the individual producer must first belong to a cooperative association of some kind. The overwhelming surpluses of farm products that have flooded the market and knocked the bottom out of price levels, must be overcome by unified action in all phases of production and sales. Mr. Wilson commented favorably on several cooperative organizations, such as the pioneer Dairyman's League Association of New York, which have done good work for their members.

Those farmers who believe that the government, by passing a bill, can immediately bring unprecedented prosperity to agriculture, should pay attention to what Mr. Wilson—in company with many other authorities, public and private—has said. No artificial cure can permanently raise farm prices and establish the industry on a sound foundation. No politician can repeal the law of supply and demand. Government may help, it is true—but the fundamental need is for cooperation among the farmers themselves. They must band together into large and powerful organizations, if they are to control their destinies. The farming industry is basically no different than a manufacturing industry—and the principal of mass action which has given this country world industrial supremacy, will produce exactly the same result for the farm as for any other business.

Upper Peninsula Gets Apples From Southern Michigan

Wisconsin, Minnesota and the upper peninsula of Michigan constitute an excellent market for lower Michigan apples at present, according to lists of primary destinations published in the bulletin of R. E. Keller, state and federal market news representative in Grand Rapids. Saturday's shipments from Michigan of 46 cars quite largely north and west, most of the remainder going to Chicago, Detroit and Toledo.

Twelve cars went to Wisconsin, the cities receiving them being Milwaukee, Manitowoc, Antigo, Hayward, Eau Claire, Chippewa Falls and Marshfield. Three cars went to the twin cities in Minnesota. One car each went to Escanaba, Houghton, Hancock, Ishpeming, Ironwood and Manistique in the upper peninsula.

Charging that state inspectors are enforcing the potato grading regulations at Grand Rapids in a more stringent manner than in many other cities of the state, many truckers have withdrawn from this market. Receipts of tubers in the city wholesale market have fallen off considerably as the result, and No. 1 stocks commanded 35 and 40 cents per bushel yesterday.

Grand Rapids consumers are getting the benefit of excellent quality potatoes, as the result of the unusual activity of state inspectors. At least that is true of tubers offered by truckers on the city wholesale market.

Eat More Potatoes To Boost Michigan

One inexpensive way in which housewives can boost Michigan products is by the use of potatoes which may be utilized in everything from soup to candies, according to nutrition specialists at Michigan State College.

One ideal serving of food supplies food elements in the proportions of one unit each of calories, protein, calcium, phosphorus, and iron, while potatoes supply these in the following proportions, calories, 1; protein, 1.1; calcium, 0.7; phosphorus, 1.6; iron, 3.2.

Miss Roberta Hershey, Michigan State College extension nutrition specialist, offers a few different ways of preparing potatoes, soufflé, a la Goldenrod, soup, muffins, Spanish, Oak Hill, diamonds, and Dutch. For the potato muffins 1 1/2 C. flour, 1/2 T. salt, and 4 T. baking powder are sifted together. To 1 C. cold mashed potato, add 3/4 cup milk and stir until well mixed. Combine the two mixtures and then add two well beaten eggs. Add 2 T. melted shortening. Place in greased muffin tins and bake in a moderate oven 375 degrees F. about 30 minutes.

Housewives are warned that a good potato can not always be told by its outside appearance. One which shows a green skin will taste bitter when cooked, for it has grown too close to the surface and has been sunburned. The wisest course for the homemaker is to choose medium-sized potatoes that feel firm when pressed in the hand. Dry, mealy potatoes are best for mashing and baking, and the more waxy varieties are most suitable for salad and creaming since they will hold their shape.

Bake potatoes frequently, Miss Hershey urges. Brush the skins with fat before placing in oven and eat the skins. A large proportion of the minerals is found directly under the peeling. When done, crack the skin to let out the steam. Cook potatoes in their jackets often; as much as 20 per cent loss may result from paring before cooking. Start potatoes to cook in boiling water and keep the water boiling. Never dice them before cooking. Use the cooking water which contains valuable mineral salts, in soups, sauces, or gravies.

Hoover Proposal May Help Farmers If Congress Acts

American farmers are likely to benefit if congress acts favorably upon President Hoover's suggestions for the relief of the nation's financial structure.

Ever since the deflation in farm values began in 1920-21 the farmer has complained that the limited ability of banks, insurance companies and other financial institutions to rediscount farm mortgage paper through the federal reserve system has made it extremely difficult to get adequate loans.

If Hoover's proposal that "eligibility provisions of the federal reserve act be broadened" contemplates the addition of farm mortgages to the classification of property eligible for rediscount, agriculture may hope for a more liberal policy by national and state bank authorities in the matter of property loans.

Should the president's plan be interpreted to liberalize acceptance of farm land and buildings as mortgage security, it is believed there may be fewer foreclosures and less land forced on an unwilling market. It also is thought that banks will not have to out approval of the examiners that the size of farm loans is almost nil and that interests rates to the farmer may decline.

POULTRY

MORE TURKEY EGGS SET BY HATCHERIES

Turkey producers are depending more and more each year upon commercial hatcheries as a source of supply of turkey poult, says the United States bureau of agricultural economics.

In a survey made recently of the operations of approximately 2,000 commercial hatcheries for the years of 1930 and 1931, reports were obtained from 190 plants that hatched turkey poult in one or both years. Forty-one reported 1931 was the first year they had attempted to hatch turkeys. Many stated their first hatch was largely experimental but, in most cases, they were well pleased with the results and indicated they would operate more extensively in 1932.

On the other hand, 15 plants reported the results obtained in 1930 were not satisfactory, either because of poor hatchability or lack of demand for the poult. They made no settings in 1931.

In addition to the increase in the number of commercial hatcheries hatching turkeys in 1931 over 1930 some measures of the growth of the industry may be obtained by comparing the number of eggs set and the number of salable poult hatched in the two years. In 1931 a total of 624,693 eggs set and 375,545 salable poult hatched were reported by the 190 plants, compared to 548,551 eggs set and 319,069 salable poult hatched in 1930, a gain of 13.9 per cent in the number of eggs set and 17.7 per cent in the number of salable poult hatched.

Since the number of turkeys hatched in commercial hatcheries is a very small per cent of the total estimated number hatched on farms and elsewhere these increases should not be construed as indicating a larger supply of marketable turkeys in 1931 compared to 1930. A very large proportion of the increase was reported by concerns that had been hatching turkey poult for several years and had built up an expanding business with large turkey growers who had found it more satisfactory to obtain their poult from the commercial hatcheries rather than to maintain a breeding flock.

Many small breeders, too, have found it more economical to have their eggs hatched on a custom basis by local hatcheries rather than to depend upon the vagaries of the turkey hen. Also, by having the hens continue laying more poult may be obtained from a breeding flock during the season.

The commercial hatchery industry is looking forward to a rapid expansion in the hatching of turkey poult within the next few years. The problems of incubating turkey eggs now are better understood than a few years ago. This is illustrated by the increase of 17.7 per cent in the number of salable poult hatched in 1931 over 1930 when the increase in the number of eggs set was only 13.9 per cent.

The development of highly specialized turkey breeding and producing areas has brought about a more dependable source of hatching eggs, while the commercial raising of large flocks for the fall and winter markets is developing a good demand for commercially hatched turkey poult. This development has been in progress for several years, especially in the Pacific coast and mountain states.

The hatching of turkeys by commercial hatcheries is not confined to any particular area or areas, although some sections are going into it a little more intensively than others. Expansion has been especially rapid in the east central, west north central, mountain, and Pacific coast states. These sections produce a very large proportion of the annual crop.

POULTRY WILL KNOW ALL ABOUT OWNERS

Any chicken that goes to bed this winter with cold feet and without its ear muffs will know its owner failed to visit the traveling laboratory from Michigan State College which shows how to make hens comfortable and profitable.

A special truck has been fitted up to visit 20 Michigan counties during November and December. The truck carries working models of the best types of poultry houses and full sized models of such equipment as mash hoppers, water fountains, nests, poultry house heaters, and catching crates.

Suitable rations for farm and commercial flocks will be discussed by college poultry specialists at each of the stops made by the truck. The control of disease to keep the flocks in condition to produce winter eggs will be a leading subject at each of the meetings.

Counties visited in November are Berrien, Branch, Calhoun, Jackson, Macomb, Oakland, Wayne, Monroe and Genesee, Washtenaw, Ingham and Oceana.

The December schedule is: Muskegon, Dec. 1; Newaygo, 2; Mecosta, 3; Gratiot, 4; Allegan, 7; Ottawa, 8 and 9; Kent, 10, and Barry, 11.

Arrangements for the meetings in the counties are made by the county agricultural agents who select the time and place for the meetings.

Passenger (to station agent): "What is the population of this town?"

Station Agent: "Durn it, count 'em yourself. They're all here at train time."

COUNTIES RECEIVE $1,000,000 MORE

The state highway department has announced the release of $1,000,000 as the current payment to counties of their share of weight tax collections. The current payment brings the total sum turned over to counties this year to $5,000,000. This is approximately half the total they are expected to receive for the entire year.

The current apportionment includes: Allegan, $9,042; Antrim, $3,085; Barry, $5,350; Benzie, $2,989; Berrien, $19,633; Charlevoix, $3,469; Clare, $2,496; Clinton, $5,942; Eaton, $7,373; Emmet, $4,606; Genesee, $36,695; Grand Traverse, $5,435; Gratiot, $6,453; Ionia, $6,684; Isabella, $5,310; Jackson, $18,599; Kalamazoo, $20,363; Kalkaska, $2,075; Kent, $46,913; Lake, $2,218; Leelanau, $2,927; Manistee, $4,420; Mason, $4,920; Mecosta, $3,999; Missaukee, $2,476; Montcalm, $6,274; Muskegon, $16,005; Newaygo, $4,609; Oceana, $3,871; Oshtemo, $3,347; Ottawa, $11,250; Van Buren, $8,521; Wayne, $334,432; Wexford, $4,228.

Plants to Boost Work This Month

With the Oakland Motor Car Co. and the Wilson Foundry and Machine Co. planning to take back many of their old employees during November, the amount of unemployment in Pontiac is to be greatly reduced within the next few weeks. The Oakland company announced that its foundry will be opened the week of Nov. 9, the motor and sheet metal plants the week of Nov. 16, and the assembly plant the week of Nov. 23.

Resurrection Plant

The Genuine "Rose of Jericho"

These peculiar plants are found among the pines and cedars of Palestine. When you get the plant it will have the appearance of a ball of tightly folded leaves, dry and dead. Put it in water and it will open up its handsome fern-like foliage, turn green and begin to grow in about twenty minutes. Take it out of the water and it curls up, turns brown and becomes dead again. It is capable of apparently dying and coming to life again repeatedly, and will keep in its dead or dormant state for years and re-awaken directly upon being placed in water. It is an interesting, curious and most beautiful house plant with fine fern-like leaves of very agreeable fragrance. If you want a "table fern" that will prove satisfactory under all conditions, don't fail to get one of these marvelous of plant life. It grows and thrives in a shallow bowl of water, and is greatly admired by everyone.

MICHIGAN'S SYSTEM OF PARKS UNUSUAL

Michigan has one of the few state park systems in the country in which no charges are made of any kind to the public, according to the parks division of the conservation department after a survey of the other states' recreational systems.

The only charge made in any of the Michigan parks is for special services such as the rental of bathing suits and boats and sales made at supervised concessions.

In some states, according to the parks division, charges are made for camping space. In other parks visitors are charged for parking their automobiles. In one state a fee of 10 cents is charged all adults entering the parks.

One large park system leases cottage sites on a more or less permanent basis and occupying some of the choicest park land.

Michigan's state parks are supported entirely by appropriations from the state legislature.

Grand Haven Hopes To Keep Oval Open

Citizens of Grand Haven are circulating a petition requesting the city council to work with the state in keeping sand off the oval. Each winter hundreds of motorists drive to the oval at the state park and cannot get in because of the sand which has drifted across the pavement. It is not known what action will be taken though it is understood the members of the council will favor a plan to keep the state park open the year around.

Factographs

It has been estimated that the Coliseum in Rome was built in one year.

The first book on vital statistics was written by an Englishman in 1662.

About four tons of grapes are required to make one ton of raisins.

The hearse was originally a framework for setting candles in, and was commonly used at funeral services for distinguished persons.

Plans for Prison Are Being Completed

The final drafts of the plans for the new prison in Milan, together with the specifications for the new buildings, are in Washington for the approval of the Department of Justice. According to information from Smith, Hinchman and Grylls, Detroit architects, the plans have been completed and have been presented to official Washington.

The plans for the first group of buildings includes at least two structures, part of which will be two stories high and the balance to be of one-story construction. The entire unit will be of stone, cement and brick and will be built as nearly fireproof as modern building science makes it possible.

If the present plans are approved by the building division of the Department of Justice, the advertising for bids will be started at once and, according to the statement of the architects, the contracts will be let about the middle of December. Thirty days are usually required for the advertising of bids before the contracts are let.

No definite information is as yet available as to whether work will be started this winter, but the architectural firm have given out information that in all probability the work would start as soon as the contracts are let.

Grand Haven Keeps Ferries

Reports emanating from Muskegon during the past year to the effect that the Grand Trunk car ferries would be moved from Grand Haven to Muskegon are denied by William L. Stribley, secretary-manager of the Chamber of Commerce at Grand Haven. "The Grand Trunk car ferries are not in Muskegon and, from reliable sources, we learn that they never intended to move their car ferry operations out of Grand Haven to Muskegon," declared Mr. Stribley.

Mr. Stribley also announces that a careful check-up shows that Grand Haven's industries are doing much better than those of the surrounding cities. This he attributes largely to the diversity of the former's industries and to the many economic advantages which prevail at Grand Haven. Assurance has been given by Grand Haven to both President Hoover and Governor Brucker that the city intends to take care of its own needy during the coming winter.

Seeks New Oil Markets

Organization of the Oil and Gas Producers' Association of Michigan for the purpose of opening new markets for Michigan oil and to raise the price of crude oil was announced at Mt. Pleasant recently. Representatives of 30 development, royalty and drilling concerns attended the organization meeting. H. W. Grant, Mt. Pleasant, attorney for the Michigan Oil and Gas Company, was elected president; Elsworth Brown, Midland, vice-president; and W. W. Russell, Mt. Pleasant, secretary-treasurer.

Ford Says Effects Of the Depression Will Be Beneficial

Henry Ford thinks the economic slump "has done less harm to the people of our country than a continuance of our previous false prosperity would have done."

In an interview in a recent issue of the American Automobile, Ford says, "The depression is a wholesome thing, in general."

"The condition will be broken when people cease to believe something can be obtained for nothing and when people get back their self-dependence; that is when they cease to lean on the initiative of a few either to provide work or charity."

He said lower wages hurt business, while increases in wages increase business.

Abandon Auto Cartel

The world automobile export cartel, proposed to United States manufacturers by Andre Citroen, during his recent visit in this country, has been abandoned by the French car manufacturer because of the refusal of Henry Ford to join in the plan.

The Citroen proposal calls for the establishment of an international automobile export corporation comprising the manufacturers of the United States, Great Britain, France, Germany, Italy, Belgium and Czechoslovakia, for the purpose of developing sales in 107 countries not now adequately merchandised in the automotive field.

Detroit to Get $2,750,000

A delegation of Detroit officials were promised by Governor Brucker that the state would advance to the city of Detroit $2,750,000 with which to pay the Gratiot avenue condemnation award. This will enable the city to proceed immediately with its street widening project and will afford employment to approximately 3,000 men. The money will be paid in two installments, $1,300,000 on January 20 and $1,450,000 on April 1.

With assurance of this amount to be advanced by the state, Detroit will seek to borrow $2,750,000 from bankers immediately and go ahead with the project. The condemnation awards involved are those between Brush and Vernor Highway on Gratiot avenue.

How to Use Crude Oil

Daily use of 1,000 barrels of crude oil from the Isabella-Midland oil field for fuel purposes is planned by the Dow Chemical Company of Midland, if experimental tests are successful. Arrangements have been made with the Pure Oil Co. to pipe the crude from west of Midland.

Jackson Rate Advanced

Jackson's winter tax rate this year will be close to $21.71 on each $1,000 valuation, compared to a rate of $20.98 last winter, it is estimated on the basis of appropriations made by the county board of supervisors.

Cities Cut Tax Rate

Winter tax rates announced by three Michigan communities show two declines and one slight increase. Albion's winter tax rate will be $26.84 per $1,000 of assessed valuation as compared with $27.92 last year, a reduction of $1.08 per $1,000. North Muskegon's rate, for the coming year will be $1.80 per $1,000 of assessed valuation lower than last year. The winter tax rate at St. Joseph will be $24.23 per $1,000 assessed valuation as compared with $24.08 last year.

STATE IS SEINING FINGERLING PERCH

With the hatching of perch in Michigan's fish hatcheries suspended this year all of the perch planted will be from the Boardman river at Traverse City and other places in the state where the large runs of fingerlings from the great lakes are experienced.

Until 1931 at all hatcheries where facilities were available perch were hatched by the millions and planted as fry in lakes about the state. The fish division of the department of conservation now believes that but a small percentage of these fish live to maturity and that the planting of much smaller numbers of fingerlings from 2 to 3 inches long will have better results in repopulating lakes with this species.

As a result of abandoning the hatching of perch this year the seining of fingerlings during the run up the rivers is being carried on on a larger scale than in the past.

Last year 3,750,000 of these perch fingerlings were taken from the Boardman river, 4,000,000 were taken from the St. Joseph river at Berrien Springs and large numbers were taken from the Cass river at Frankenmuth and at Van Etan lake in Isosco county.

The cost of planting fingerling perch seined during these runs is far lower than the cost of hatching them and feeding them until they reach fingerling size.

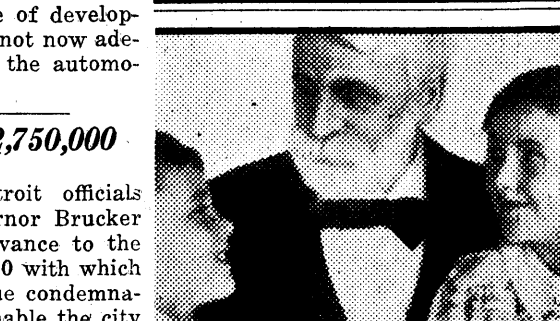

Saginaw Dredging To Start at Once

Work on the southern end of Saginaw River dredging project will be started at once by the Duluth-Superior Dredging Co., officers of the company announce. Dredging since early last summer has been concentrated entirely in Saginaw Bay and the river running through Bay City. Two dredges will be used, one at the Saginaw end of the stream and the other in Bay City. The dredges will work until the river freezes this winter.

Bellaire Digging for Drinking Water Wells

Test wells are being sunk by the village of Bellaire to find a source of water supply other than that from the Intermediate river, which has been declared unfit for drinking purposes, especially in summer. A state geologist is expected to assist in making the tests.

Takes an Interest

(WNU Service.)

TOMMY PRESTON was lounging on the shady side of the porch at the Kingsboro Country club when Nancy Phelps ambled up the steps, said, "Hi, Tommy," and flopped into a chair beside him.

"What's the matter, Nancy?" asked Tommy. "You look tired out."

"I am," said Nancy. "I've been following Ted Pearson and Sam Shane around the links. What a game! Nearly everyone expected Ted to win easily, but Sam fooled us. He was three down at the turn, but on the last nine holes he came back beautifully and won at the eighteenth. But, boy! It was not walking out there."

"You didn't have to be there," Tommy drawled. "You didn't see me out under that sun watching two saps chase a golf ball, did you? You just bet you didn't. I sat here in the shade, enjoying a nice, cool drink."

"I thought you were going to enter the tournament," Nancy said.

"I was," replied Tommy, "but then I decided it involved too much work." Nancy's face flushed. She was terribly in love with Tommy, but she could not stand his indolence.

"Tommy," she said, half pleadingly and half angrily, "aren't you interested in anything?"

"You know I'm interested in something, Nancy," he said. "I love you and you love me, too. I know that."

Nancy glanced up slowly. "You're right, Tommy," she said. "I do love you. But I won't marry you. Do you really want to know why?"

"Is it something I've done?"

"It's partly that," said Nancy, "and it is partly something that you don't do. Shall I continue?"

"Please do."

"First of all," Nancy went on, "you have been going around town wearing an expression of superiority when you've done nothing to prove that you are a superior person. You've just lived on the money you inherited."

"Well," Tommy interrupted, "it is my money."

"I'll grant you that," Nancy agreed, "but I don't like your cynical attitude toward the accomplishments of other men. You never have won a club championship at golf, tennis, swimming or anything else. Yet you make fun of the boys who have."

"Those things don't mean anything," Tommy protested.

"They do mean something," Nancy insisted. "They at least show an interest in things that are going on around one. You aren't contributing a thing to anyone's life."

"That is pretty harsh," Tommy commented. "But just what do you want me to do about it?"

"Would you really like to do something about it?" asked Nancy.

"Go ahead. What is it?"

"Just this," Nancy went on. "If you want to marry me you have got to do these things. First, you must get a job, and you have got to hold a job through merit, not through your money. I'm not saying you must become a partner in the firm within a year, but you must be promoted at least once during the next six months. And, secondly, you must win at least one sports tournament here at the club. If you have done these things by six months from today, I'll marry you. Otherwise, why then you go your way and I'll go mine."

"But that isn't fair," Tommy protested.

Six months later, on a cold January night Tommy paced nervously back and forth across the Phelps living room. A few months later Nancy, looking more beautiful than he ever had seen her, came down the stairs and approached him with a smile.

"Tonight is the night, isn't it, Tommy?" she greeted him.

"I'm afraid it is," Tommy replied. Then, impulsively, "Nancy, won't you forget the conditions you made and marry me anyway?"

"Let's review the conditions before we talk about that," Nancy answered evasively. "You were supposed to win at least one sports tournament at the club. Did you?"

"You know I didn't," Tommy said.

"Golf was the only game I could play well enough to enter a tournament, and you saw Ted Pearson beat me at the last hole in the finals. But you'll have to admit it was a great match."

Nancy just smiled again, and said: "And about a job? You did get one, didn't you?"

"You bet I did, and I got two raises and one promotion as well." Tommy's eyes were flashing as he spoke. Will you marry me, Nancy, even though Ted did beat me?"

"Of course I will, Tommy," Nancy replied eagerly. "I never cared whether you were a champion or a duffer. I just wanted you to get interested in something beside yourself. You've done that, and I'll marry you any time you say."

Odd Elevation

Climbing as they built, members of a construction crew erecting the steel towers for a power line in California and Nevada found one efficient way to get up in the world. These men almost pulled themselves up by their bootstraps as they erected the towers, placing one section then climbing on it to start the next. The line furnishes the power for the construction of Hoover dam.—Popular Mechanics Magazine.

American Museum Gets Relics of Bronze Age

More than 300 objects, many of them over five thousand years old, are on exhibition in the University of Pennsylvania museum. The finds, the majority of which date from the early Bronze age, were uncovered at Tepe Gawra, Mesopotamia.

Some of the earliest pottery ever excavated in the Near East, a small copper frying pan, a cylinder seal of a goat done in a decidedly expressionistic manner, an alabaster animal figurine, reminiscent of early Chinese jade work, and an exquisitely painted clay chalice of about 3000 B. C., are included.

In addition there are numerous other animal figurines and amulets, a complete cosmetic set of the period, a mold for casting bronze objects and a stone palette for mixing paints.

The unusual nature of some of the finds, together with the fact that they are remarkably well preserved, makes the collection of particular interest, according to Dr. Ephraim A. Speiser. "Both the seal of the goat and another stamped seal of about 3570 B. C., the latter which portrays an ibex, show a sense of design that might almost be called modernistic," Doctor Speiser stated, "while the frying pan constitutes a particularly valuable discovery because it still retains its original handle, a very unusual occurrence."

"Particular interest is attached also to the pottery, for it precedes the bronze work in age, and points to a time in the history of Tepe Gawra when a state of comparative leisure existed. This leisure subsequently was driven out by the advent of metal, for the coming of bronze accelerated the mode of living, and the painted pottery gave way to things of a more utilitarian nature."

Authority on Spelling of Geographical Names

The federal department which is the final authority on the spelling of geographical names is the United States Geographic board. As far as is practicable, the United States Post Office department accepts the decisions of this board in all its official spellings. In the case of Pittsburgh, Pa., the board was first asked to pass on the correct spelling in 1891, at which time it decided in favor of the spelling "Pittsburg." This decision, however, met with a great deal of opposition among citizens generally in Pittsburgh, and in 1911 the board consented to reconsider the case. One of the deciding factors in the final decision was the "original seal of the Borough of Pittsburgh," which was struck in 1794, and which was brought forward as evidence. The Geographic board's final decision in 1911 reversed the original decision and established Pittsburgh as the official spelling of the name of this city.

Moss Rose Legend

According to German tradition, the legend of the moss rose is as follows: "Once upon a time an angel, having a mission of love to suffering humanity, came down on earth. He was much grieved at all the sin and misery he saw and at all the evil things he heard. Being tired, he sought a place to rest, but as it fared with his master, so it fared with him, there was no room for him, and no one would give him shelter. At last he lay down under the shade of a rose and slept until the rising sun awoke him. Before winging his flight heavenward he addressed the rose and said that, as it had given him shelter which man, denied, it should receive an enduring token of his love, and so, leaf by leaf, and twig by twig, the soft-moss grew around the stem, and there it is today, a cradle in which the new-born rose may lie, a proof of God's power and love."

Electric Pipeless Organ

Capt. Richard Ranger of trans-oceanic radiophotograph fame invented the electric pipeless organ. It is both pipeless and reedless and responds to a series of electrical switches, tone generators and amplifiers when its standard pipe organ keys are played by an organist. The sounds are generated in groups, each group consisting of a series of alternators in simple ratio, controlled by one motor. Each tone is amplified and transmitted to the speaker when the corresponding musical key is depressed.

Fire Insurance Beginning

Fire insurance may be said to date from the Great Fire of London, in 1666. Several companies were formed during the remainder of the Seventeenth century and at the beginning of the Eighteenth century, some of which still exist. In the United States, the first fire insurance company to be established was the Philadelphia Contributionship, which was organized on April 13, 1752. This company was patterned in many respects after the Hand-in-Hand of London, which was established toward the close of the Seventeenth century.

Mother Knew

One day Ted accompanied his mother and little sister to a downtown store and a salesman started a conversation.

"How old is your sister," he asked?

"I don't know," Ted replied, and turning to his mother, said:

"Mother, do you know how old sister is?"

She did.

All Alice Needed Was a Firm Hand

By CLARISSA MACKIE
(© by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)
(WNU Service.)

"OF COURSE, if I did not have all the money I wanted I wouldn't dream of playing with flying machines," Alice Wayne thought as she prepared to enter the little machine built for her own pleasure. She smiled a last good-by to the man who had her machine in charge as she rose from the ground. Little by little she ascended, bathed in moonlight, flooded with the fresh cold air of the upper planes.

"All my troubles are below," she thought with a bitter little laugh. Of course, she knew that her engagement to Charlie Blake was ended—had she not broken it herself yesterday. Still, he was not the only man in her world. She hoped that he would go to England on the next boat—that would be sailing today. So enthralled had she become in her problem that she was not aware where she had wandered when suddenly she heard an odd noise above the roar of the engine. She turned her head.

Another machine was behind her. Was the driver blind that he could not perceive her machine? Could she drop? Dared she?

Ignorance dares anything.

In an instant after she touched that small lever, the machine was volplaning toward the earth. A sudden faintness came over Alice Wayne. She could not find that same small lever to pull it forward to resume her even flying!

Suddenly she fainted—she did not feel it when the plane crashed among the branches of a huge, wide-spreading oak tree, and stayed there. She did not hear the voice of Charles Blake calling out to his servants as he came out to view the disaster.

"What is it, James?" demanded Blake hurriedly.

"Flying machine, sir," called the butler. "Somebody in here—unconscious, I guess."

"Better get him down—or do you want help?"

"He's a little fellow, sir, but we'll have to have a ladder."

They shouted for a ladder, and pretty soon a great stout ladder crashed through the branches and found a brace against a branch. "I'll take him down," said Blake, and picking up the little form was astonished it lit his lightness. He said nothing, however, and when he reached the ground, called to his housekeeper, and, still carrying his unconscious burden, bore it into an unused bedroom.

This young fellow's lost his senses, Mrs. Carey," he said. "Can't you do something for him while I telephone for the doctor?"

"Good gracious, Mr. Blake," cried the woman, "it's a girl!"

"Yes," said Charlie Blake in a queer strangled voice. "It is a girl—one that I know, too. Mrs. Carey, can we keep this a secret from the servants?"

"I will try, sir."

"It will be difficult for you, Mrs. Carey to take care of her alone."

Mrs. Carey laughed softly. "Not at all, Mr. Blake—not at all—I hope you won't let this accident stop you from your trip to Europe."

"It may—please do not mention my name just yet, to this girl."

An hour later, Doctor Smith shook Mr. Blake by the hand, assured him that the patient was resting quietly.

Charles Blake stood there a long time after the doctor went. He was wondering about Alice—what had she been doing in a plane at night? Just because he had told her yesterday that he did not approve of airplanes for women, she had broken their engagement.

It was three o'clock when he telephoned to her family, and it was four o'clock when the Wayne automobile dashed up the avenue, and Alice's parents arrived at his house.

"She's sleeping like a top now," said Charles, to Alice's anxious mother, "but if you will go up there, Mrs. Carey will find a couch for you."

In the library, he talked with Mr. Wayne for an hour. "She's a kid, Alice is," said her father emphatically. "She will never have an airplane again—what she needs is to be taken hold of and told what to do. Can you do that?"

"Rather," said Blake quietly.

"Then she's yours for keeps."

The next morning they all sat in her room while Alice ate her breakfast. On her third finger was Blake's diamond ring.

"As for the airplane," said Mr. Wayne briskly, "I will send somebody over from the airport to get it down—it's a mess of junk."

"Why, daddy, I am sure it could be mended," broke in Alice, "and Charles and I have thought of honeymooning in it, haven't we?" She turned to Blake, who hesitated for an instant, then spoke firmly.

"To tell the truth, we haven't mentioned the plane, Mr. Wayne, and for my part, I'll say that my wife will never ride in one again, eh, Alice?"

Alice stared amazed at the man she loved, at the firm faces of her parents.

"No, Charles," she said in a very "small" voice.

Drawing Fire From Sun

The focusing of the sun's rays by curved mirror surfaces was known to the Romans and Greeks, and this is said to have been employed at the suggestion of Archimedes in the battle of Syracuse, when the sun's rays were focused on the wooden ships and set them on fire.

Writer Absolves Nero; Emperor Fought Flames

Arthur Weigall, the historian, has knocked into a cocked hat the notion that "Nero fiddled while Rome burned." Poor Nero! He not only did not know how to fiddle but was head of the fire brigade.

According to Mr. Weigall in his fine and scholarly volume on Nero, this gentleman when the fire broke out was at his country estate. And that explodes the popular notion that he set the place on fire for the fun of watching it burn.

He rushed back to town and spent six days and nights working like a Trojan—or like a Roman, it being another wrong notion that the Romans worked harder than anybody else—and organizing fire brigades all over Rome trying to put the fire out.

When, however, it got out near his own magnificent home with its great collection of art treasures and he saw it was doomed, he stood on the river bank in front of the house and sang a funeral dirge, for Mr. Weigall states that Nero was one of the greatest singers that ever lived—a tall, robust, red-haired, freckled-faced opera singer, more interested in his music than in fires or in burning Christians.

Thus do our notions crumble one by one before the onslaught of truth! —Albert E. Wiggam in International-Cosmopolitan.

Body of Cortes Rests in Mexico City Church

The Mexican government announced not long ago that it is in possession of documents proving definitely that the remains of Hernando Cortes, Spanish conqueror of Mexico, are in the central altar of the church of Jesus Nazareno in Mexico City, says Pathfinder Magazine. For more than a century there has been a mystery as to the final disposition of the remains of Cortes. He died near Seville, Spain, on December 2, 1547, and his ashes were sent to Mexico about 15 years later and placed in the hospital founded by him in the Mexican capital. When the agitation against everything Spanish was at its height in 1823 the ashes of the conqueror were removed to the church near the hospital for fear that they might be desecrated. The church, which will be made a Cortes shrine, is near the hospital which still benefits by the will of Cortes. The conqueror of Mexico, like many other Spanish heroes of the time, was neglected after he returned to Spain. There is a story to the effect that he once forced his way through a throng around the carriage of Emperor Charles and mounted the step. Charles demanded who he was. "I am a man," Cortes replied, "who has given you more provinces than your ancestors left you cities."

Sausages as Tithes

In the town of Demen, Germany, it seems, the church is entitled to receive 130 pounds of a certain kind of sausage, known as Mettwurst every year from the local tithe-payers. Recently the latter refused to supply the ration of sausage. The church invoked the aid of the law, and the tithe-payers had to deliver the customary Mettwurst. But the church was still unsatisfied—the sausage, it was alleged, was not up to standard—it contained too much beef. Mettwurst has always been a source of trouble in Mecklenburg-Schwerin. In many parishes the local clergyman was entitled to so many ells of the sausage from his parishioners. He always got the right length, but if he were unpopular, the Mettwurst was of the smallest possible thickness, there being nothing in the bond regarding its diameter.

Castle of Sleeping Beauty

The ancestral castle of the counts of Eltz is one of the finest in Germany, resting high on a precipitous rock, with cloud-piercing tower and rimmed with dark green woods. This is the castle made famous by Sleeping Beauty, if legend is to be believed. It dates back to the Twelfth century and its gray walls have seen many a battle waged. It might almost be said to be three castles in one, grouped about an inner court, and each of the three has its own entry. It is full of the paraphernalia of dream-haunted rooms, heavy iron-bound chests, carved doors, old pewter, massive refectory tables which surely have often trembled beneath their loads of venison, wine and the thunderous merriment of feasters.

Hollywood Now Obscured

The somber walls of Hollywood palace, Edinburgh, have lost remembrance of the grandeur of its former days, yet it holds some of the most glamorous and the saddest memories of Mary Queen of Scots. Here on the 9th of March, 1566, Lord Darnley murdered David Rizzio, an Italian, whom he accused of improper relations with Mary, his wife. Exactly 12 months afterward he himself was murdered by the earl of Bothwell, who married Mary after less than three months.

"Uttering and Publishing"

This legal phase is most generally used in connection with the circulation of counterfeit money, forged notes, etc. Bouvier's Law Dictionary states that "to utter" in criminal law is to offer or to publish; also that "to publish" means primarily to make known. Webster's dictionary quotes F. Wharton that "to utter and publish a document is to offer directly or indirectly, by words or actions, such document as good."

ROMAN THEATER DISCOVERED BY
"M" EXPEDITION

Advices from Professor Leroy Waterman received by President Alexander G. Ruthven state that the season's work of excavating at Sepphoris in Palestine closed on September 6 and that the party left the place on September 9 after having discovered the remains of a Roman theater and what is probably an early Christian church.

The theater was discovered after sinking a trench to bed rock on the northeast portion of the citadel area of the site where the ground slopes sharply. It was found that the living rock had been carved in tiers in the fashion by the Greeks and Romans for the seats of their outdoor theaters. Subsequent excavation uncovered a portion of the outside theater wall, a main entrance, the central exit and most of the stage building a system of drainage by means of lead pipes underneath the orchestra pavement. The existence of a Roman theater at Sepphoris was hitherto unknown.

Its discovery was a complete surprise to the excavators as there was no trace of it on the surface and no tradition of its existence had persisted. The structure seems to date to the first part of the first century of the Christian era. It is particularly interesting as it testifies to the nature of the culture of the capital of Galilee during the lifetime of Christ. Sepphoris was only an hour's walk from Jesus' home at Nazareth. This is the first Roman theater to be excavated in Palestine proper. It seated approximately 5,000 persons, had a radius of about 110 feet, and was excellently constructed of first class materials.

The remains of the church were discovered by sinking a second main trench. This excavation disclosed a mosaic pavement and when the trench was enlarged it became clear that an early Christian church had existed at this point with the traces of an older building on the same site. It was impossible to complete the excavation of this church within the time at the disposal of the party and for this reason it is impossible as yet to determine the age of the structure. The citadel area on which both of these structures were discovered is now occupied in part by the village school and it was necessary to carry out all the excavating work during the school's summer vacation. Sepphoris, which was built by Herod Antipas (the Herod of the New Testament), was one of the most important cities of Galilee and its capitol at various times. It did not join in the rebellion which resulted in the fall of Jerusalem (70 A. D.) and was protected by the Romans. In the latter part of the second century A. D. it was the seat of a famous Jewish school. A Christian bishop is not mentioned in connection with the city until the sixth century A. D., and the so-called Itinerary of Antoninus of Placentia, written apparently in the second half of that century, mentions the existence of a Christian church there, marking the place of the announcement to Mary, mother of Jesus.

The party consisted of Professor Leroy Waterman, director; Dr. C. S. Fisher, of the American School of Oriental Research of Jerusalem, as archaeological advisor and pottery expert; S. Yeivin, architect and field assistant; N. Manasseh, surveyor, and Fadel Sabba, photographer. About 100 local workmen were employed on the excavations which began on July 9. The work was made possible by H. B. Earhart of Ann Arbor, who contributed funds for its support.

Pontiac Considers Short School Year

Consideration of curtailing the school year from two to four weeks is being considered by the school board, James H. Harris, superintendent of schools, revealed Tuesday. The school term may be cut short to avoid deficit, he stated. Definite action has been delayed until later in the winter, when payment of taxes will afford a more definite basis upon which to figure the amount that will be available for school purposes.

STAR LORE
WHEN HARVEST MOON IS IN
ASCENDING NODE, ITS RISING
IS HASTENED

By Arthur DeV. Carpenter

At the time of harvest moon, when the sun is at the autumnal equinox, of course the moon is half way around its orbital path from the sun, or 180 degrees. Consequently the moon would be near the point Aries or vernal equinox. At this time the moon would come up just as the sun went down. But if the moon is now in its ascending node it will continue to progress in its lunar orbit at an angle to the north of the ecliptic which would be still nearer to the horizon, for the plane of the moon's orbit around the earth is at an angle of 5 degrees 8 minutes with the plane of the ecliptic or plane of the earth's orbit around the sun.

Modernizing the Young Girl's Bedroom

No matter how great a "tomboy" a girl may have been, there comes a time when she considers herself a young lady although others may still think of her as a child. It is sometimes difficult for parents to realize that daughters who yesterday longed for a new sled, skates, or a bicycle have put those things away and desire in their stead a chaise longue, a dressing table, or a slipper chair. Whenever it is possible, a young girl's interest in the home should be sustained rather than discouraged. If she displays an active interest in redecorating her room, she is only manifesting a quite natural domestic instinct.

The furniture on hand may be out of fashion, or, according to the young lady's taste, it may not be as handsome as potential moving star deserves, but it can be made sweet, charming, and dainty, nevertheless. Robin's egg blue, mist green, soft shades of peach, apricot, or tea rose, primrose yellow, violet, and coral are all appropriate and lovely colors for the furniture of a young girl's room. Furniture is not difficult to paint or enamel, and often even its style can be made more modish by a few amputations or additions. For instance, an old-fashioned dresser whose mirror is attached might have this attachment removed and hung above the drawer section. Enamel these pieces to harmonize with soft painted walls, and an inspiring transformation is immediately accomplished.

For bedrooms having a northern exposure a soft yellow, cream or ivory is better choice for the walls than the cooler, receding shades of green and blue, though where the walls are coated in a light, warm color, the latter shades may be used on the furniture with impunity. Rose, coral, salmon pink, peach, and apricot are effectively complemented by robin's egg blue, turquoise, sea green, jade, and yellow. If the walls are painted cream or ivory, the furniture may be enameled any of the favorite smart pastel shades. The woodwork may be coated to match either the walls or the furniture, and additional color accents may be introduced by crisp, ruffled organdie curtains, bright chintz, cushions, and other accessories. Sheer flowered batiste or dimity makes dainty glass curtains, especially when their ruffles are bound with a solid color appearing in the design of the material.

Encourage a decorating daughter to include the closet of her bedroom in her campaign, for fashion now decrees that the closet be a part of the sleeping-room "ensemble." There is no denying the fact that if a closet is dainty, well-equipped, and light, the effort necessary to keep one's clothing in a neat and orderly array is far less. Coat hangers, shoe, hat, and stocking boxes, shoe trees, and hat stands may echo any favorite shade used in the bedroom. The walls of the closet should always be painted or enameled a light ivory or cream color. The shelf surfaces, may be coral, jade, yellow, robin's egg blue, orchid, or any color the young lady prefers. Laundry bags, dress bags, bags for soiled gloves and handkerchiefs, may be made of chintz matching that of the bedroom draperies. Taking care of one's wardrobe is a pleasure instead of a duty where there is an attractively decorated closet.

WORK SCARCITY CUTS
U. OF M. ENROLLMENT

Inability to obtain work has forced a number of students who came to Ann Arbor to enroll in the University of Michigan, to remain out of school, it became apparent when the final registration count for the fall term was made. The county showed a total of 9,165 students enrolled, 266 less than were in school on the corresponding date a year ago.

The largest decrease was shown in the Literary college, where 3,996 students were registered, against 4,214 a year ago. This loss is believed to be due partly to the fact that an increasing number of high school graduates are going to junior colleges each year.

The Graduate school showed a record total of 1,394 registered, as against 1,160 last year. Other departments which showed increases were the School of Business Administration and the School of Forestry and Conservation.

One of the Cheapest
And Best Foods

Campaigns to encourage the consumption of milk will, of course, benefit the dairy farmers of the nation—but a far greater benefit will come to the public as a whole, and particularly to growing children.

The value of milk as food can hardly be over-estimated. It has no effective substitute. It contains elements vital to sustain and nourish the system and provides them in easily assimilated form. Dr. Percy Howe, lecturer, of Harvard Medical and Dental School, says a quart of milk a day will help prevent decay of teeth by furnishing necessary lime.

It may be said that the nation has never had a better or safer milk supply than at present. In most states rigid codes of standards are in force, and organizations among dairymen themselves are working in the interests of safe and wholesome milk. It is one of the cheapest foods—and likewise one of the most necessary.

Household Hints

MENU HINT

This menu hint is just an ordinary meal for an ordinary day. Chili con carne makes a good, hearty dish, and this manner of making it may differ a little from your own. When macaroni is used potatoes may be omitted. The cabbage and apple salad will give crispness to the meal.

Chili Con Carne
Cabbage-Apple Salad
Entire Wheat Bread
Peach Delight Milk

Recipes

Chili Con Carne—One pound macaroni, two pounds hamburger, two cans kidney beans, one can tomatoes, one onion. Cook macaroni till tender, drain, chop onion and simmer with the meat, for one-half hour, add tomatoes and beans, add all to macaroni, salt, and simmer one-half hour.

Peach Delight—Cut sponge cake in squares, cover with sliced peaches, top with whipped cream or thin custard.

Cabbage-Apple Salad—Shred or chop cabbage quite fine, add half as much chopped apple, a little onion and half as much celery as apple. A little grated carrot adds both to the color and flavor. Mix with your favorite salad dressing.

Butter Sponge Cake
3 eggs, 1 cupful of granulated sugar, ¼ cupful of cold water, 1 cupful of pastry flour, 1 teaspoonful of baking powder, ¼ teaspoonful of salt, 2 teaspoonfuls of hot melted butter, 1 teaspoonful of vanilla extract.

Sift the flour once and measure it, then add the baking powder and salt and sift all together once more. Break the eggs into a mixing bowl and beat to a froth, add the sugar, water, extract and flour, beating thoroughly. Last of all whip in the hot melted butter. This is a very useful cake and may be baked in a thin sheet and rolled for jelly roll, baked in layers, or in muffin tins.

SUGGESTIONS
Oil Cleans All

The cloth moistened with kerosene will clean the kitchen sink, the outside of the teakettle and the top of the stove.

Made Room
A housewife writes: "When baking a pie recently I had my oven full except for a small space which would not hold my pie tin. So I hit upon the scheme of putting in a small pan, inverting same, and setting my pie on that. This saves time and fuel as I could do all my baking at once."

Longer Wear
The economical buy in bed and table linen is half-bleached linen. It is stronger than the bleached linen and will become creamy white in a few washings.

Our Country—Its History
By ANNE BYRON

KING PHILIP'S WAR

One of the greatest hardships which the early settlers of our country had to brave were the cruel attacks which the Indian tribes instigated from time to time. There is no story of frontier days that is not resplendent with the bravery of the whites against the Indian rampages, and early New England was the scene of some of the most fierce struggles of war with the Indians.

One of the most terrible was that stirred up by "King" Philip in 1675 in Rhode Island, Connecticut and Massachusetts. Philip was the son of an old friend of the English, Massasoit. His real name was Metacomb, but he was called Philip by the English. Philip believed that the steady flow of settlers into the country would deprive the Indians of all their possessions, and he refused to acknowledge himself as the subject of the colonial government.

He moved quietly around among the tribes, stirring them up, until at last he aroused them to fury. Rushing on the helpless settlements, they burned over fifty towns and put to death with horrible cruelties over a thousand people. For two years this terrible warfare lasted.

At last Philip's wife and little son were taken prisoners and sold as slaves in the West Indies. When he heard of this Philip said: "My heart is broken; I am now ready to die." He was soon afterward killed and the Indian power was broken forever.

How to Achieve Beauty
By MME. HELENA RUBINSTEIN

SELF-CONTROL

That seems rather an unusual heading for a beauty talk, but self-control is a very necessary part of physical and mental loveliness. The mind and the body are so closely attuned that they seem to be almost interdependent, a consideration well worth remembering when temperamental, unreasonable anger threatens to upset the even trend of your mental poise.

Scientists tell us that rage actually sends a poison through the blood polluting the circulatory system; a serious, physical consideration quite apart from the effect it has upon your complexion and the unpleasant lines it etches upon your face.

Have you never seen the "temper lines" around the mouth of an otherwise charming young woman? Scientific care can take away the lines but they will come right back again unless the character they betray develops a more wholesome sweetness. Remember that there are lines—and lines! Anger lines and laugh lines—some are ugly and some beautiful. I should hate to reach 60 and find myself with a skin like a colorless canvas, stripped of all character and expression. You can readily see that Self-Control may do much for your face. It can be of equal service for your body. It isn't always easy to refuse the tempting foods that are ruinous to the slim lines of the figure—but it only requires self-control.

It takes quite a lot of self-control to stick to the dietary measures which bring renewed beauty to both your body and your face. It takes self-control to remember that the downward droop at the corners of your mouth is accentuated, in fact is actually brought into being by permitting all the less pleasant happenings of the day to weigh upon your mind and disfigure your face.

There's a certain self-control which might be classified as physical self-control, which prevents stooped shoulders and a slouching body by calling your muscles rigidly to attention when they slip into ungraceful lines and angles. Daily exercises will do much to cultivate it. Stretching, which is marvelous for limbering a stiff body, will soon develop plant litheness and muscular control.

You have only to want a thing to the exclusion of everything else to achieve it. If you want beauty and youth, concentrate all your efforts on them. About your work, whether it is in the office or in the home, there are many things you can do to help yourself to loveliness. Are you always avoiding bending and stooping in your daily tasks? Don't! They are wonderfully good for you. Limber your muscles. Whenever you wash your hands, your dishes or even your clothes, press the cuticle back from your nails and then rub a rich nourishing cream or lotion into your hands.

Keep your temper—plan your work wisely and don't forget your daily beauty regime. It sounds simple, enOUGH, doesn't it? And really it is every bit as easy as it sounds

WEEK OF NOVEMBER 22

Strong, shifting winds of gale force in many parts of the state will usher in the week of November 22nd. This will be the tail end influence of the rain and wind storms which we predicted for the end of last week.

During Sunday temperatures will take a sharp turn downwards and the weather will remain cool to cold for the season during most all the first half of the week.

During the last half of this week thermometer readings will be mostly above the seasonal normal. Weather conditions will be unsettled and showery. The cloudiness will be more or less heavy, which will make murky days but we do not believe that precipitation will be overly heavy for the season nor as much as the cloudiness might warrant.

Looking at the week as a whole we believe the first part will be better fitted for plowing on most soils than during the last half.

Thanksgiving Day Forecast

Thanksgiving day this year will be better gridiron than andirion weather as far as the temperature is concerned. While there may be showery weather on or about this day, we do not expect any snow nor very cold weather. The day will be somewhat cloudy and perhaps threatening but thermometer readings will be somewhat above the seasonal normal.

Dinner Stories

No Night Work

An outfit, fresh from the docks of St. Nazaire, had been shot up front and found the going tough and dangerous. The news filtered through that an order had been transmitted shooting them up over the top without delay—the next morning, in fact.

The top kicker and a buck private had been talking over the question of the hereafter, and the top said:

"Listen. If I die first, I'll come back and tell you what it's all about."

"That's swell, chief," said the private, "only for P-P-ete's sake, if you d-d-d-o-c-c-come back, d-d-do me a favor and c-c-come back in the daytime."

Empty Victory

It was pouring. Two men who had quarreled went out in the rain to settle their differences. They fought until one got the other on his back and held him there.

"Will you give up?" he asked, and the reply was "No."

After a time the question was repeated, but again the reply was "No."

"Then," said the other, "will you get on top for a while and let me get under? I'm getting wet through."

He Should

A crowd quickly gathered when a street car struck a milk wagon. As a small man was pushing his way to the front, he found himself blocked by a large, portly woman. Peering around her and seeing the cream and milk on the pavement, he exclaimed, "Heavens, what a waste!"

The woman turned angrily and yelled, "You mind your own business!"

Right, Too

First Typist: "How do you spell 'sense'?"

Second Typist: "Whatja mean, 'cents' in money or 'sense' meaning brains?"

First Typist: "Neither one—I mean like, 'I ain't seen him sense.'"

When TEETHING makes HIM FUSSY

One of the most important things you can do to make a teething baby comfortable is to see that little bowels do their work of carrying off waste matter promptly and regularly. For this nothing is better than Castoria, a pure vegetable preparation specially made for babies and children. Castoria acts so gently you can give it to young infants to relieve colic. Yet it is always effective, for older children, too. Remember, Castoria contains no harsh drugs, no narcotics—is absolutely harmless. When your baby is fretful with teething or a food upset, give a cleansing dose of Castoria. Be sure you get genuine Castoria with the name:

LOVE, PREFERRED

THE ROMANCE OF A BUSINESS GIRL

By EDNA ROBB WEBSTER

Copyright 1931, Central Press Association

"Martin, I couldn't think of it. I'll have to work every night for about a week to catch up. Besides, mother isn't strong, and I need to hurry home to her whenever I can leave early—for awhile."

His keen disappointment was apparent.

"Well—of course. But you will let me come for you and drive you home whenever you are finished here? I have nothing else to do, you know, dear."

Mary was in a dilemma. She had decided to accept Foster's proposal of marriage and had no wish to encourage Martin's further attentions. Still, she could not be too harsh with him. Mary expected that Foster would take her to dinner and then drive her home that night, so she said:

"I haven't the least idea when I'll be through tonight, Martin. Some other night, please. I should rather not think I was keeping you waiting for me. Mr. Foster has been so generously considerate—I want to forget everything but the work until we get straightened out again."

"Well, have it your way. I have no objection to waiting for you—that's all I am doing these days, anyway, just waiting for you."

And now, she was having a quick lunch alone, before returning to the office; and reflecting upon the curious fact that so often things happened just the way you hadn't planned for them. Life was so bewildering and unexpected.

CHAPTER XLII

Later, in the silent, lamp-shaded seclusion of Foster's office, he stopped his dictation quite abruptly to say:

"Mary, you are a treasure of a secretary. You have no idea how I have missed you. And what I should do without you during especially busy weeks, I dread to think. It is shameful how a man grows to depend upon a good secretary."

Mary thought, "Now, he will ask me again to marry him. Now is my opportunity. I must tell him by decision before I lose courage. I think I am ready—perhaps, for Mom's sake." She smiled. "Oh! I'm sure there are many who could take my place, if necessary. You had been in business for a long time before I happened along."

"But I never had a secretary who could compare with you. Strange—how very different you are from your sister, isn't it? Now, she could never—"

"My—yes?" surprised.

"Why—yes, of course—" he looked at her queerly,—"er, you know I've taken a great interest in Bonnie—" awkwardly.

"I didn't know you knew Bonnie, Mr. Foster. Did she come in to tell you about Mom for me?"

"Oh, no—I first saw her at Jameson-Blair's. And we've become very good friends on the few occasions we have been out together—"

Mary stared with incredulity. Then she grasped the situation with a few quick mental calculations and managed a casual interest.

"Yes, Bonnie is very unlike me," she agreed, her thoughts in a turmoil of wonder, doubts, fears, disappointments. "Bonnie needs to be taken care of," she added, with significance. She wondered if it were possible that Foster, after all, could harbor a passing fancy for a pretty girl. Why should he be taking Bonnie about? She would not betray her sister to him in any way, of course. But she must talk with Bonnie.

Mary wondered why she had not told her that she knew Foster and had been out with him. Perhaps Bonnie had told Mom about it, resenting Mary's interest in her affairs. Mary guessed why—and sighed. Bonnie knew she had been going about some with Foster since Dick had deserted her. She sighed, and turned her attention to the work at hand. She hoped Foster would offer no more confidences tonight.

Foster did drive her home afterward, but only with perfunctory obligation. He appreciated that she was anxious to get back to her mother, the lateness of the hour, and the fact that it was all in the family.

Sitting beside him, so aloof and strange to her in the close privacy of the car, Mary tried to realize that this was the man she had decided to marry. Some remote thought almost hooted in her brain. How absurd she had been to think she could calmly do such a thing! It was odd, how immediate conditions and needs could so affect one's reasoning. When her concern for Mom had been most imminent and she had recognized the solution to her problem, Foster's proposition had seemed quite sane and acceptable to her. Here, in his immediate presence, everything was so different. Mary knew that she would have to find a new solution to her problem. Was Martin Frazier the answer?

When Mary went upstairs, she found Mom asleep, so she did not disturb her. Bonnie was in bed, but Mary knew that she had been looking out the window and saw her get out of Foster's car. Bonnie looked at her suspiciously.

"Hello, Old Faithful, back on your job, aren't you? Work late tonight, or out with the boss?" She tried to sound indifferent, but failed. She was aching to know all about it, as Mary well knew.

"Work—and more work. No, I can't say that stepping out with the boss is such a thrill."

"Oh, no? When did you get that way?" Bonnie's voice sounded relief. "That would depend upon the boss, of course."

Mary met Bonnie's eyes, squarely. "Don't try to keep it from me, Bonnie. I know that you have been out with Foster, too. I don't care, only I shouldn't want you to do something foolish, you know."

Bonnie was resentful. "There you go—always razzing me. That's some more of my private business—see? And if you must know, I mean business this time. You can't stop me, either."

Mary was alarmed. "Why, Bonnie, what do you mean? You surely aren't taking Foster's attentions seriously, I hope."

"Why not, I'd like to know. He has grabbed for the bait, hook, line and sinker, the poor fish."

"You mean he wants to marry you?"

"Oh, don't be so dull, my dear. Of course. I flatter myself I've done a pretty neat piece of work. The minute I saw the old boy, I decided he was as good a chance as I'd have for some time. And it worked out perfectly. He fell right into my hands without a flop of protest."

"You—love him, Bonnie—"

Bonnie laughed with amusement. "Innocent! what do you mean—love? And what's it for, anyway? He answers the roll call all the way down the line—money, social prominence, important name, fairly good-looking and he's ga-ga about me. What more could I ask? If he looked like the devil, I couldn't see his money, even, but taken all around he looks pretty good to yours truly."

"But, dear, he is so much older than you are. After all—"

"Oh, sure. But what of it? He is like an old fur coat put away in moth balls, all right, but he might brighten up in the sunshine of my smile. After all, I might as well marry a 'has been' as a 'will be,' that never might be at all. Dick has the looks of a prince, but that doesn't make me a queen in ermine, and he may not go so far, at that! I notice he hasn't burned up the street since he's been going with me. I doubt whether he has saved much toward that seat on the exchange he talks about."

Mary knew he hadn't—and why he hadn't. He probably never would, with a sweetheart or a wife like Bonnie. The kind of woman who demanded so much from the beginning were the ones who killed the prospects for the future—like killing the goose that lays the golden egg. They wanted everything at once.

So Bonnie was jilting Dick. Well, that was something else again! What a merry-go-round of changing events life was! It went faster and became more confusing with every gyration.

"Have you told Mom about this?" she asked quietly.

"No, but there's plenty of time. I haven't wanted to worry her any while she was ill." Thoughtful consideration, and convenient.

"Well, I'd talk it over with her before you make any decisions or promises. I hope—whatever you decide—will be for your happiness, dear. But don't rush into something you may regret. Mr. Foster is a fine man—it isn't that. I just want you to be satisfied and—happy."

"Oh, well—marriage isn't for life, you know, especially if there's a chance for alimony. Times have changed since it was the thing to stick it out until death did them part. In the meantime, he may pass out before long—and the world belongs to a pretty and wealthy widow," airily.

"Bonnie!" Mary pleaded.

"Oh, don't be so darned serious, old thing! Can't you see a joke? Well, wish me luck! One thing is sure, and you may check that up in your list of never-will-be's—this baby is not going to slave all her life for a mere existence while the world in its wealth rolls by. I don't need to. I've got looks, and that's what men want. Let them pay for it. No use to give mine away for a song, or youth. I want comfort and pleasure, and I'm going to have it. No one can stop me," defiantly.

No one tried to stop her.

CHAPTER XLIII

Bonnie and Foster were married within another week. Foster came to talk one evening with Mrs. Vaughn about it, they were married the next day in New York and left for the south at once.

Mrs. Vaughn had opposed the marriage, of course. In her opinion, no girl of twenty-one should marry a man old enough to be her father, and more. But Foster made a good impression with her, Bonnie was determined, and there was nothing to do but give them her consent and blessing.

No girl, she believed, should be grieved and unhappy in the beginning of her married life just because her mother wasn't entirely satisfied with her choice. She had lived her own life, Bonnie and Mary could live theirs. There was some satisfaction in knowing that Bonnie would be taken care of. She needed a man who would provide well for her.

Foster's limousine brought Mom and Mary to the city for the ceremony, and drove them home again.

Their eyes were misty with the sweet vision of chiffons and sables and flowers that was their Bonnie—now Mrs. Ronald K. Foster, standing on the observation platform of a limited for Florida ready to leave Pennsylvania station. Foster, beaming and happy, tucked his wife's little gloved hand under his arm and waved his hat with a final farewell as the long Pullman train with its electric locomotive glided away into the tunnel under the Hudson river.

Feeling strangely alone even in the hurrying throngs about them, Mary and Mom walked up the carpeted incline to the gates through the vast, columned terminal and up the steps to Vanderbilt avenue, where Foster's car awaited them.

"Well, I s'pose it could be worse, all right," Mom tried to reassure herself. "He's a good man, and I don't know but what it's the best thing for Bonnie. I don't think she ever would have been satisfied with a man like Dick Baldwin. Bonnie is ambitious, but not that way."

"Oh, don't worry, Mom. She'll be all right. It's just so sudden that we haven't got our balance yet—that's all. Doesn't it seem funny to think that our little Bonnie is married and gone away? Here we are, and after our taking care of her all these years, she has done better for herself than we ever could do for her."

Mary devoted herself to Foster's affairs at the office, kept him informed daily of developments by wire. Musing over the events of the past week, she was glad that it was not she who had gone south as Foster's wife, even with golden prospects of a secure future. In a way, her problem had solved itself. Bonnie was no longer her responsibility and she would be able to help Mom a little, perhaps. No reason why Bonnie shouldn't spare her mother a small regular allowance from her own generous one, too.

She smiled a little at the thought that now she would have to manage her sister's finances, pay her accounts, write her checks, even arrange her social appointments to some extent, in so far as they concerned Foster.

Mary was not oblivious of the fact that Bonnie's marriage freed Dick Baldwin. She could not have been human to ignore that fact. But she thrust the remainder from her, resolutely. If he hadn't loved her before, he couldn't love her now. That was that.

She wouldn't let herself be tortured by hopes and speculations. But her heart aches for Dick and his sudden desertion by Bonnie. Didn't she know what it meant to have someone you loved, suddenly desert you for another?

In the events that had followed in such rapid succession, Mary had not been able to spare any time to Frazier. Her excuses had been plausible enough, so he patiently bided his time. On the first day that Mary was alone in the office, he made his usual call.

"Well, well, so Foster married the little sister, eh? We should have made it a double one, Mary."

"That wouldn't be practical," Mary laughed. "I have to be here to steer the ship of state while the captain is away."

"Well, who wants to be practical, anyway? Mary, I'm taking you out to celebrate tonight. I won't be refused."

"All right," she agreed, but there was no eagerness in her manner. "I'll run down to Willa's and change. I still have most of my things there. I haven't had time to move back home."

"Get them together and we can take them out tonight, dear. No trouble at all, you know. Where would you like to go tonight?"

"You plan, please. I shall like it, whatever you decide."

"That's sweet of you."

Willa Duchon was voluble with her remarks. She hadn't seen Mary for over a week. So much had happened, of which she had had only the briefest information from Mary by telephone.

"So the little sister jilted Dick? Serves him right! I hope it teaches him a thing or two. I'm rather glad for his sake, too. She wasn't the girl for Dick, you know."

"No, I think not. If he loved her, though—"

"Don't you worry about that, my dear. A pretty face and mild flirtation can convince most any man of something he doesn't believe at all. He will recover and not even have a scar, I'll warrant."

"I hope so."

"I hope for other things, too. But don't be too good to him, Mary, when he returns."

Mary started, and flushed. "Oh, he won't come back to me. He couldn't have loved me—and wanted Bonnie at the same time."

"Uhm! Well, time will tell. So you're leaving us again? Awfully sorry, Mary. We've enjoyed having you around, and we hope you will drop in often to see us. I know how your mother needs you, though. Why not come over for Sunday evening and stay the night? I'll get Dick to come, too."

"Oh, I couldn't think of that," Mary's voice was frightened.

"Very well. We might give him a little more time to dispose of memories and disillusion. He might not be so pleasant to have around yet, under the circumstances."

Mary had been changing into an evening dress and packing her trunk and suitcase while Willa assisted with putting her dresses on hangers and trees in her shoes. Mary's dress of soft tan crepe with pointed lace inserts was the kind of simple adornment that best became her quiet loveliness. With a final inspection of herself in the mirror, the realization came to her that the past year and its many conflicting experiences had added character to her face and endowed her with a new beauty that she had not noticed before.

The fact was that Mary was not beautiful in the sense of classic features and measured lines. But she had charm and sweetness and character, which are just as attractive and often more gratifying.

It was evident that Martin Frazier found it so, watching her fondly that evening. Mary discovered that her pleasure in being with him had diminished since their last meeting. She liked him better than she had first thought she would, but was not particularly happy in his company. She experienced no response to his delight in her presence, no enthusiasm for his plans, no interest in his comfort and happiness.

If only she could accept Bonnie's philosophy—here was wealth, power, comfort and luxury for herself and those she loved—for the taking.

She had only to reach out her hand and say, "Martin, I'm yours." But it was not so simple as it seemed. For Mary had a heart that was attuned to more sensitive vibrations and a soul that was her own.

CHAPTER 44

Two weeks passed swiftly. Foster and Bonnie returned to New York. Even marriage could not curtail Foster's zeal for keeping his hand pretty well at the helm. Bonnie was petulant at having to leave the tropics and return north at so miserable a season. The change in her, affected by two weeks of marriage, was astounding.

She was sophisticated, autocratic, imperious. The couple took a suite at one of the most exclusive hotels while they decided upon a house. Mary gasped at the mere thought of their daily expenses, which were more for the two of them than for the four Vaughns during the whole month.

Of course, she had known it would be like that—but the actual figures were something of a shock when she paid the accounts by checks. Bonnie lounged about her rooms in elaborate negligees until time for lunch each day, then adorned herself in some stunning ensemble selected from her extensive new wardrobe, and drove or shopped.

As she went around with her husband in his own circle, and met the younger members of that clique, she formed new attachments that completely ruled out the old ones. For awhile, she drove out to see her mother once a week; but as she became absorbed with her new interests and companions, her visits at home were less frequent.

At first, Foster humored his wife's insatiable desire for excitement and entertainment. It afforded him a certain pride and pleasure to present his pretty wife to those who long had accepted him as a confirmed bachelor. But when that innovation had passed, and he had finished a busy day at the office, he began to desire the private seclusion of quiet evenings with Bonnie, as the charming little companion he had visioned her.

They had been in New York for a fortnight when his disillusion began. Returning to the hotel one evening after an especially trying day with a bad market and many frantic appeals and protests from clients, he found Bonnie dressed for the evening in a shimmering, sequin-encrusted, backless, sweeping-the-floor black model. An ermine evening wrap lay across the chair ready to embrace her soft, gleaming shoulders.

"Do hurry, Ronnie," she greeted him impatiently. "Why did you stay at that old office so late tonight? You know we are going to the Van Kidney's dinner-dance at the club."

He managed a weary smile. "Must we go? I should so much rather spend the evening here with you, darling."

"Well, you may think that flatters me. But it doesn't. I'm all ready to go and we are late now. Do get a move on, for heaven's sake."

"You look very sweet, Bonnie," still making no effort to rise from the chair where he had dropped with a sigh of satisfaction.

"Well, you don't need to think I'm dolled up for your personal benefit. What's the use to have swanky clothes if no one sees them, I'd like to know?"

"We've been out somewhere every night since we came back," he reminded her gently.

Her disappointment and anger seethed. "Well, if you think I married you to sit home by the fire with you, Ronald Foster, you've got another guess coming. We are going to the club tonight," with finality.

He regarded her with mild surprise and his own disappointment and anger began to awake.

Bonnie observed the little frown of annoyance that waved its flag of warning, and changed her tactics.

Her tone was cajoling as she flew over to him and clasped her arms about his neck.

"I'm sorry you are tired, dear. But I do want to go tonight so awfully much. Please, just this time—for me."

She won the family joust in this manner for some time thereafter, but he yielded with less grace on each occasion.

Besides, as Bonnie and her vivacity became more popular with the younger set of their clique, Foster soon found that he was more and more a bachelor again. Slim, sleek-haired youths claimed most of the dances with his wife, leaving him to the mercies of smirking dowagers as of old.

Christmas had followed immediately upon their return to New York. His gift to Bonnie was a handsome town car for her own use. The most equalled Mary's salary for two years.

He presented Mary with a check for two hundred dollars. Ordinarily he would have made it only one hundred, but being her brother-in-law required a more liberal token of his appreciation.

Mary was grateful for the bonus and felt justified in accepting it. She had earned it, whether or not she was related by marriage to her employer. Yet she would have accepted no more even on such terms.

The day of Christmas Eve was a quiet one on the market, so Mary left the office at market closing time. She had some last-hour purchases to make for the family's holiday. She always trimmed a tree for the boys and tried, in so far as she was able, to cover the list of their wants, like any father of a family. Their demands became more expensive and difficult with each year, for they wanted everything they saw in the fascinating toy shops and which other youngsters had. Mary learned that as the world progressed with ingenious devices and mechanical living, the same progress reached into the realm of childhood and there was nothing lacking for them than the imagination could conjure.

When PAIN Comes

WHAT many people call indigestion very often means excess acid in the stomach. The stomach nerves have been over-stimulated, and food sours. The corrective is an alkali, which neutralizes the acids instantly. And the best alkali known to medical science is Phillips' Milk of Magnesia.

One spoonful of this harmless, tasteless alkali in water neutralizes instantly many times that much acid, and the symptoms disappear at once. You will never use crude methods when once you learn the efficiency of this. Go, get a small bottle to try.

Be sure to get the genuine Phillips' Milk of Magnesia prescribed by physicians for 50 years in correcting excess acids. 25c and 50c a bottle—any drug store.

SINBAD DATES

Sinbad Dates are the staple food and product of the whole of Southern Mesopotamia along the banks of the Shat-al-Arab River. Without dates the Arab, whether he be river dweller or desert Beduin, could not survive.
Dates are the perfect food. The finest dates are grown in Mesopotamia, because no other part of the world has such suitable growing conditions. Sinbad Dates contain 85 per cent sugar, while those grown elsewhere contain about 45 per cent sugar. Its for this reason these dates are so caramelly and sweet; yet they cost no more than others.
