The following new officers were elected for the ensuing year:
Pres., Ella Torrey
Vice Pres., Clara Burgett
Sec., Ethel Langdon
Treas., Emma Shearer
After another pleasant gathering all departed for their homes to meet with Ethel Langdon, Feb. 4th.

Basket Ball

Gobles sure pulled a tight game with Lawrence last Friday night, after trailing the entire period, by tying the score in the last minute of play and winning in overtime 26 to 23.

The locals missed many chances until the last quarter, when they began to locate the basket regularly. More basket ball for the price is seldom seen and to win two games in one season from Lawrence has not happened before since we can remember.

The second team had to be content with the short end of a 11 to 10 score in the preliminary game but the visitors had to go some to take their scalp.

If the locals continue as good as they were Friday night we are sure they will win all their remaining games.

Spring Soon

People who depend on the proceeds of summer should now be planning what they will do to make the most of this season.

Wise farmers are already studying to try to determine the most profitable crops, how to prepare, and when to plant to get the best results in quality and yield. Still wiser ones are trying to determine which of these crops will be apt to be in most demand and where they will find the best market for the same.

No locality of which we have heard is better favored naturally for the production of certain fruits of better quality and for many kinds of food vegetables and if all producers of these things will take advantage of these natural conditions and raise only the best in their lines, in time the community will gain a reputation that will result in highest prices for these products, and highest prices usually represent the difference between profit and loss.

Human nature demands the best and regardless of conditions there are always enough with money to pay extra for the best.

Poultry, eggs and butter fat are other things that have stood up as well or better than most farm products and those producing these intelligently have fared better than producers in other lines.

As stated many times before this section, centrally located between two of the country's four largest cities with other cities of smaller size near, is most advantageously situated to market all food products and with a volume of quality foods only, could soon demand and get a price consistent with this quality.

In nearly every grocery we ever heard of, you will find a bunch of bananas in varied stages of consumption or decay; a few years ago a few housewives furnished stores with cottage cheese and created such a demand that factories started delivering the same regularly and it is now sold at many stores. We recommend that if you produce something good that you encourage your grocer to sell it for you, in small quantities at first until a demand is created, then keep up the quality, do your best to supply the demand at a reasonable profit.

The town and surrounding community are interdependent and both must work together for the good of both, or both must fail.

LUDINGTON GIVEN POSTOFFICE PLANS

First blueprints showing the approach and general ground plan of Ludington's new $100,000 federal building and postoffice, to be started next spring, have been received by Postmaster C. W. Perry.

Minor obstructions, which must be removed soon, are marked in the drawings. The site picked is the northeast corner at Ludington Ave. and Harrison St., adjacent the public library and diagonally opposite Hotel Stearns. A store building, garage and dwelling have been removed and except for minor cleanup work the site is ready.

Main entrance will be on Ludington Ave. Lawns are laid out for the east and west sides and a spacious parking space and driveway is allowed in the rear of the building.

Plans do not reveal the architectural design, but the foundation dimensions show the building will be 93 feet in length and 51 feet wide. Blueprints showing the front elevation and design are expected soon.

May Use 1931 Automobile License Plates Until March 1

Secretary of State Frank D. Fitzgerald has issued an order to the effect that 1931 automobile plates will be permissible in Michigan until March 1, 1932, and the following states have agreed to honor the Michigan plates until that time: Ohio, Illinois, New York, Wisconsin, Indiana, Pennsylvania and the Province of Ontario, Canada.

Shows New Engine

A diamond-shaped, eight-cylinder Diesel engine, with 16 pistons, was demonstrated for the first time at Cleveland recently by its inventor, F. B. Stearns, former automobile manufacturer. It is made entirely of aluminum or aluminum alloys except for the crankshaft. The new engine weighs 2,000 pounds and develops 160 horsepower. It consumes .42 pounds of fuel oil to the horsepower hour.

The cylinders are elbow-shaped. Oil is pumped in at the "crook" of each cylinder, just as the pistons are forced apart by the explosion, the exhaust gas goes out a port halfway down one of the "branches" of the cylinder, while fresh air is forced into a similar part of the opposite branch.

Gold Mine of Ideas for Farmers

Here's "the most remarkable book ever published for farmers," says one authority. It is remarkable in the extreme practical nature of its contents, in the wide range of farm subjects covered, in the world of illustrations it contains, and in the extremely low price.

861 Discoveries

One discovery sometimes makes a fortune. Here are 861 of them, any one of which may be of many dollars value to you. These discoveries may be classified as follows:

- 123 for the farm sheep
- 41 on fencing
- 46 on auto, truck, and tractor
- 44 on farm buildings
- 41 on field machinery
- 44 on concrete work
- 41 on orchard work
- 41 on painting
- 41 on electrical work
- 7 on greenhouse work
- 22 on farm tools
- 24 on garden work
- 17 on poultry
- 17 on the lawn
- 140 on household help
- 76 on miscellaneous farm work
- 46 on hunting, fishing, and trapping

—and every plan has been tested and found to be a money-saver. Most of the articles are illustrated with photographs or drawings. The devices described are easy to make because of these pictures and clear descriptions.

Suppose you could live your life 417 times. Now you could forge ahead of other farmers in a way that would insure you liberally and cheaply. This book enables you to do the next best thing — you may have the experience of 417 lives — experience of successful farmers as told by themselves — briefly, clearly, comprehensively. And all this is yours for only $1.00. The book is illustrated with accurate drawings. Imagine 270 pages close to 1000 — 300 original clear illustrations. Just think of the value to you!

Just send $1 and the book will be mailed to you postpaid

Hitler Attends Nazi Wedding With Martial Rites

Following the curious new customs of the German Fascist "Nazis," Paul Joseph Goebbels, one of that party's Reichstag deputies, is seen being married to Mrs. Magda Quandt in Goldenbow, Germany. Behind the bridegroom, to the right, is Adolf Hitler, the Nazi chieftain, who acted as a witness.

EARLY HATCHING OF FISH VISIONED

Continued mild weather with consequent high water temperatures probably will mean early hatching of commercial species in the various fish hatcheries, the fish division of the conservation department declared recently in reporting results of late fall spawn taking operations.

Last year trout eggs hatched in late January and early February, and whitefish hatched early in March, at least a month earlier than in ordinary winters. With similar conditions this year a repetition of early hatching is expected. Lake trout and whitefish spawn in falling water temperatures and the eggs hatch in rising temperatures. This has caused late spawning and early hatching.

There are approximately 134,000,000 lake trout and whitefish eggs now hatching in the federal and state stations in Michigan. Of these 7,590 quarts or 48,500,000 eggs are trout and 2,140 quarts or 85,500,000 eggs are whitefish.

The eggs were taken late last fall by commercial fishermen who stripped the fish of their spawn under regulations of the department of conservation. The take of spawn was much smaller than it was during the fall of 1930.

Bureau Is Planned By Home Builders

Initial steps for the establishment of a home inspection bureau to insure adequate protection for Kalamazoo home builders in the future were taken when a group of 150 persons representing the various building trades and institutions financing home building met at Kalamazoo.

The plan was presented by John M. Wyman of Cincinnati, editor of the Building and Loan News. Definite organization is expected at a meeting to be held soon. If organized, it will be the first bureau of its kind in the country, it is claimed, although a bureau at Shreveport, La., is organized on similar lines, and is operating with great success.

The meeting was sponsored by the Builders' Bureau of the Chamber of Commerce with Hubert L. North of Kalamazoo presiding. Fred E. Stile of Detroit also spoke.

Honest Truck Drivers Aided by New Rules

The new regulations for the weighing of trucks and trailers before 1932 licenses can be obtained will benefit honest truck owners instead of working a hardship on them, it was pointed out by Secretary of State Frank D. Fitzgerald.

The new regulations require that the truck owners obtain an official weight receipt after having their vehicles weighed on a designated scale. This receipt then must be presented when 1932 licenses are obtained.

In the past honest truck owners have paid their full tax to the state. But they have been penalized by dishonest owners who have not borne their full share of the cost of operating the state, it was pointed out. Under the new system the honest owner will pay the same tax as in other years and will have the satisfaction of knowing that others are not defrauding the state and thereby gaining an advantage in lower operating costs. The new regulations are expected to add at least $500,000 to the state's revenues in 1932.

Charlotte Completes Free Car Parking Lot

As a result of the donation of a parcel of land to Charlotte by Fitch S. Beach Charlotte manufacturer, the city now has a paved parking place for motor cars. The city paid the cost of paving the lot and decided that the land should be used for free automobile parking so long as deemed necessary by the council, and after that it could be used as a public playground or park.

The lot will accommodate 85 cars. Shrubs will be planted to add to its beauty and a tablet bearing the name of the donor will be placed in the center of the parking space.

Attorney Ernest G. Davids, county poor commissioner, and an alterman from each ward arranged for labor from unemployment lists. The park committee with Louis C. Gee as chairman, made plans for the project, and Harvey A. Williams, county surveyor, donated his services. O. J. Bottomley, Charlotte contractor, supervised the work.

Kazoo County Offers Land for Penal Farm

Following the vote of the Kalamazoo county board of supervisors favoring the penal farm plan for Kalamazoo county, in case it were found to be practical, Dr. Caroline Barlet Crane announced the proposed gift of a 200-acre farm to the county for such use. She was not at liberty at this time to disclose the name of the donor, she stated.

Dr. Crane has spent considerable time in making surveys of prison farms in this and other states, including that used by the Detroit House of Correction. She presented her findings to the board before they took vote on the matter.

The proposed gift was referred to the building and grounds committee. K. D. Wilcox, chairman of the board of supervisors, stated that a special meeting would be called at any time deemed advisable to ratify any action taken by the committee.

Present Weather Is Easy on Game

This winter has been exceptionally easy on game in general, as the snow has not exceeded two inches in depth at any time. On account of the lack of heavy snow, the deer herds have not taken to their regular yarding grounds in the thick swamps, but are seen roaming the open country. There has been an abundance of feed on high and low ground.

People who live in the sparsely settled deer sections tell of finding abandoned portions of slaughtered deer, showing many are using venison to augment their meat supply, and taking the chances of being apprehended by conservation officers.

TRAILERS MUST HAVE CHAINS

A good many people are driving trailers in violation of the law, and it is not only a menace to other traffic but puts the trailer driver in grave danger of being arrested and convicted upon a criminal charge and makes him subject to a heavy damage suit.

"All trailers or semi-trailers hauled by any motor propelled vehicle, must be so attached to such vehicle and to each other, if more than one trailer is hauled, with such forms of coupling devices as will prevent such trailer or trailers or semi-trailers from being deflected more than six inches from the path of the towing vehicle's wheels. Trailers must also be connected to the towing vehicle or to each other by suitable safety chains or devices, one on each side of the coupling and at the extreme outer edges of the vehicles, and each such chain or device and connection so used shall be of sufficient strength to haul the trailer when loaded. On all trailers and semi-trailers so hauled on the public highways between the hours of one hour after sunset and one hour before sunrise shall be carried a green light on each side of each trailer or semi-trailer, which light shall be so fixed as to be plainly visible to the drivers of other vehicles or to persons using such highways. A red light shall be properly fixed to the rear of the last trailer so hauled between the hours above stated."

Import Rainbows That Spawn Early

A new strain of early-spawning rainbow trout, said to be of less migratory habits than the Michigan strain, will be introduced into the streams of this state next year, it is announced by the fish division of the conservation department in reporting the importation of 350,000 rainbow trout eggs from Missouri and Minnesota.

The United States bureau of fisheries is giving the department 250,000 rainbow trout eggs taken from the bureau's station in Missouri. This state will also receive 100,000 eggs of Minnesota trout through exchange.

The Missouri and Minnesota eggs are of rainbow trout which spawn much earlier than the trout now found in Michigan waters, according to the fish division.

Michigan rainbows do not spawn until April or May. As a result they are much more retarded in growth than brook trout which spawn in the fall. The eggs to be imported are from fish spawning during the fall months and it also is thought they may stay longer in the streams after reaching maturity than do the Michigan variety of rainbow.

Holland Fair Buildings Bring $3,200 at Auction

The public sale of Holland fair buildings netted the city approximately $3,200. The sale was conducted by Council Member Albert P. Kleis, assisted by William Deur, police commissioner, and Mayor E. C. Brooks, who delivered a brief speech.

The big art hall brought $1,100, the horse barns each $250, Getz building $450, horse sheds $400, agricultural buildings $80, and smaller buildings, up to the judges' stand, which brought $11. Purchasers were given six months to remove the buildings.

The only building reserved was the speed horse barn, which will be utilized for the annual horse show. Between 2,000 and 3,000 persons attended the sale, which marked the final chapter in the history of the fair association.

Benton Harbor Has Hopes of Becoming Tractor Center

Prospects seem to be very bright for the manufacture of tractors on a large scale by the Ross Carrier company of Benton Harbor, who have heretofore manufactured Ross carriers which have found a ready market all over the world. Now comes the news that the Benton Harbor plant has been preparing for a year to engage in the building of tractors and that it is expected that a contract will soon be signed whereby the Ross company will supply a large number of tractors each month to Sears, Roebuck & Co. It is claimed that the Bradley tractor, manufactured in Benton Harbor, have been perfected to a point where they can be manufactured at a comparatively low price and that they are easily serviced and are a practical tractor for any small farm.

See Greater Number of Proposed Amendments

The compiling division of the Department of State is making preparations for the handling of a far greater number of proposed constitutional amendments and referendums in 1932 than is usually found on the ballot in a presidential election.

By the filing of the requisite number of signatures, the oleomargarine tax bill, passed by the 1931 legislature, has been held in abeyance until the voters have an opportunity of expressing themselves next November.

Two petitions containing 5,000 and 15,000 signatures have already been filed with the department calling for changes in the state's prohibition laws, and it is understood that additional signatures will be filed within the near future. Voters will probably be given the opportunity to pass on various constitutional amendments regarding taxation at the next election.

To place a proposed constitutional amendment on the ballot in November, 1932, 85,089 signatures are needed. To initiate legislation at the next session of the legislature, the names of 68,071 voters must be signed to petitions while a referendum on an existing law requires 42,545 names.

Governors Direct Cherry Campaign

The two youngest governors in the United States, Wilber Brucker of Michigan and Philip LaFollette of Wisconsin, will head the committee sponsoring National Cherry week, Feb. 15 to 22.

This information was given out by representative cherry canners from Michigan, Ohio and Wisconsin, 12 of whom met in Traverse City to discuss the progress of the national movement to call attention to the lusciousness of cherry pie. Both governors willingly agreed to serve as co-chairmen of the committee.

Expect Work on M37 To Get Under Way Soon

Bids for the grading of 2.124 miles of highway on M37 north of Newaygo have been opened by the state administrative board. John R. Edelman Co. of Muskegon submitted the low figure of $21,819.68 on the job, which includes construction of the necessary drainage structures.

The M37 project, which is part of the state's emergency relief program, involves a rerouting of the highway to eliminate a bad curve.

SECRETARY OF STATE DOES A BIG BUSINESS

The office of secretary of state, held by Frank D. Fitzgerald, constitutes a huge tax and fee collecting agency for the operation of the state government. Its many functions are revenue producing and for the first 11 months of 1931 collections for the office totalled $51,489,376.09.

Three activities accounted for the bulk of the receipts. The secretary of state is given the administration of the corporation, weight and gas tax laws. These three measures produced more than $49,000,000.

The gas tax collected amounted to $21,974,633.08. The corporation privilege fees totaled $6,861,444.55 the weight tax $20,185.59.

Under the old law operators licenses produced in 1930 $22,051. Under the law passed by the 1931 legislature drivers paid $772,553 in reregistration fees.

In the administration of the so-called automobile theft law, second hand car dealers and automobile owners who want titles, duplicate titles and transfer titles, paid $488,321. Branch office activities, chauffeurs, license transfers, duplicate plates, municipal plates and interest increased the total another $300,651.28.

The corporation division aids materially in financing the state government. In addition to the privilege fees, the corporations paid $124,145.87; franchise fees, $28,864.56; filing fees, $9,093.56 for certified copies, and with some incidental revenue the grand total is $7,032,936.28.

The building and loan division is not so lucrative. The fees charged this class of financing institutions brought in $56,328.06.

The malt tax, while not producing as much as anticipated, was good for $595,173.28.

Village Assured of Meeting Place

Work of remodeling the former Congregational church at White Cloud into an assembly room for basketball games and other public gatherings is being completed. The addition extends the length of the building. Wings will be added later.

The village has not had a place for public meetings since the city hall was donated to the county for a court house several years ago.

FARM LIVING STANDARDS UP

Statistics compiled by the federal census bureau indicate Michigan farmers are more prosperous than the average tiller of the soil in the United States.

A larger percentage of the state's food producers own automobiles, trucks, tractors, electric motors and gasoline engines than in the nation-at-large. Standards of living also are higher. A larger percentage of Michigan farms have telephones, water piped into the dwellings, homes lighted by electricity and use power-driven equipment than in the country as a whole.

Seventy-nine per cent of the farmers in the state own automobiles, compared with 58 per cent in the nation-at-large. The census revealed there are 150,922 cars on 133,565 farms in the state, indicating many farms have two or more automobiles.

Many farms have two or more trucks, as the census takers found 36,768 trucks on 34,894 farms. Nearly 21 per cent of all farms in the state owned trucks, compared with 13 per cent in the nation-at-large.

Some farms also have two or more tractors as the census takers accounted for 34,579 tractors on 33,098 farms. About 19.5 per cent of all farms had tractors, compared with 13.5 per cent in the United States. Six per cent or 10,285 farms owned 14,892 electric motors, compared with 4 per cent in the nation, while 27.5 per cent or 46,574 farms owned 55,366 stationary gas engines, compared with 15 per cent of all farms in the United States.

Other statistics reflecting the rural standard of living in Michigan compared with the percentage of all farms in the United States, are given below:

Soil Men Would Unlock Fertilizer Content to Plants

Methods by which soils may be made to yield their fertilizer content to plants are being investigated by the mineralogy section of the geology department in co-operation with the soils department at the University of Wisconsin.

The investigations have grown out of the fact that soils men have learned by chemical methods that phosphate and potash fertilizers, when applied to soils, do not always lead to a satisfactory degree of soil fertility. The reason for this seems to be that these fertilizers combine in the soil into mineral compounds which tie these materials up permanently and do not make them available to plant life, except in small part.

If by mineralogical methods it should prove possible to determine definitely the compounds which these fertilizers go to form, it is hoped that soils experts will be able to learn, from this information, how these compounds in soils may be modified or treated in such a way that their constituents may be made available to plants.

The investigations are being carried on by graduate students under the direction of Prof. R. C. Emmons of the geology department. The work consists essentially in a detailed study of various soils by means of a highly specialized microscope technique, which has been developed at the university by Prof. Emmons. The results to date have indicated certain definite compounds in which these important materials are found in soils.

Other compounds are being sought in this research investigation and before the work is completed it is hoped a technique will be worked out whereby most of such compounds may be definitely identified with comparative ease and rapidity. It is further hoped the correlation of these microscopic studies with the advance chemical work which the soils men already have accomplished may be translated into useful practical procedures for the benefit of the agriculturist.

Plan Ways to Cut Horse Power Cost

Due to the steady increase in the demand for good farm horses and cheaper farm power, R. S. Hudson of the farm and horse department at Michigan State college is beginning an extensive project to determine the most economical method of developing draft colts.

Twenty-four average farm foals have been purchased for the experiment from Michigan farmers. They will be sheltered in cheap straw sheds and allowed to run outside the year around. The feed will consist of corn, oats and alfalfa, fed in liberal and limited amounts. All colts will have free access to oat straw.

Accurate records will be kept of feed and development by weights and measurements for three years, at the end of which time the colts will be broken and put to work. At this time it will be possible to make definite conclusions as to the efficiency of the various methods.

The colts are located at the south end of the college farm at which place, visitors are always welcome.

Low Valuation for 1931 Crops, Reports State

Although the acreage of crops harvested in Michigan in 1931 was slightly greater than for either 1929 or 1930 and yields were better than a year ago for all except a few crops, the total value of the state's principal field and fruit crops amounted to only $86,693,000 or a reduction of 34 per cent from the figure of $131,361,000 for the 1930 production and 46 per cent less than the estimated value of $159,660,000 for the same crops in 1929.

This is the lowest valuation for Michigan crop production in more than a decade. The increase in crop production this year over last was practically offset by the sharp decline in farm prices, amounting to an average of 39 per cent less than those of last year for eighteen of the leading crops. These estimates, released by Irvin Holmes, assistant agricultural statistician, for Michigan Co-operative Crop Reporting Service, and Herbert E. Powell, commissioner of agriculture, are based upon total or gross production evaluated at December 1 farm prices and do not represent cash income.

The outstanding feature of Michigan agriculture in 1931 was the fact that in spite of the continued deficiency of moisture which prevailed from March, 1930, until September of this year, the yields of all field crops except oats and barley were above those for last year. In addition, the acreage devoted to crop production showed slight increases over both the past two years even after allowing for abandonment in the planted acreage. These losses as a per cent of the planted acreage were approximately: oats, 2.0 per cent; buckwheat, 25.0 per cent; potatoes, 2.5 per cent; beans, 8.0 per cent; tame hay, 2.1 per cent; and field peas, 19.0 per cent.

The valuations given above are based upon estimates which have been materially revised toward the production shown by the census of 1930. Except in the case of a few crops, where records justify other figures, the 1929 production figures are substantially those as reported by the census of April, 1930, for the crops of 1929. The 1930 and 1931 estimates have been revised proportionately. Pending complete revisions of the earlier records these estimates are not comparable with those for preceding years.

More Sprays Needed For San Jose Scale

Increased numbers of the San Jose scale found in Michigan orchards will make it necessary for farmers to use lime sulphur sprays more often than once in two years to secure adequate protection for their trees, according to the entomology department at Michigan State college.

This troublesome insect pest was observed first in Michigan in 1896 and caused a great deal of damage to fruit trees in the years following its appearance when no efficient control measures were known. The scale increased for fifteen years and then declined in number until it became one of the minor problems in the orchard.

Lime sulphur sprays and natural parasites of the San Jose scale cleaned up the scale in Michigan orchards until it became a standard practice to spray only in alternate years for the scale. Fewer parasites in the past few years have permitted the orchard pest to build up in numbers until now it becomes necessary again to use more frequent control sprays.

San Jose scale attacks all fruit trees and many ornamental plants. Branches on infested trees have a scurvy appearance and are killed when the scale is present in large numbers. The entomology department will examine portions of branches which are suspected of being infested with scale, if the branches are sent to the office at East Lansing.

Deer Poaching Is Common in Emmet

Deer poachers are active in Emmet county, according to Thomas Koboski, conservation officer.

Emmet county has been closed to deer hunting for the past six years. During this period the increase of deer in this locality has been rapid. This winter, however, an unusual number of these animals have been killed illegally.

Several arrests have been made of persons having deer hides or venison in possession. Conservation men have found slain deer left in the woods with only the hams and saddles removed. No snow on the ground enables the poachers to pursue and kill illegal game with a minimum danger of being detected.

Koboski says many hunters are in the woods continually with rifles, apparently hunting for rabbits. However, many of them would not hesitate to kill a deer if the opportunity confronted them, in his opinion.

The unemployment situation in the north accounts for the unusual amount of poaching evidenced in this locality, it is believed. Unemployed men have turned professional hunters and spend most of their time in procuring wild meat for their families. They exchange rabbit meat and venison for ammunition and flour to persons who do not hunt but who relish the game.

POULTRY

UNPALATABLE MASH

Among these various mash feeding problems, the most common is the one of persuading hens to eat a sufficient amount of mash.

If hens eat a little mash from open hoppers, we can assume that the mash is not as palatable as it might be. What makes mash palatable or unpalatable for hens or growing chicks? It might be any of one or two or three of a half dozen things none of which keep the hens from eating some mash but which will hold consumption too low for best production and highest returns from feed used. Home mixed mash for laying hens is unpalatable most frequently because it is too low in percentage of yellow corn, too high in crude fiber, too finely ground and contains too high a percentage of alfalfa meal, too much mineral, particularly bonemeal, or too high a percentage of ingredients with which the hen is unfamiliar.

The old belief that too much corn in poultry rations keeps the hen from laying, makes them sluggish and susceptible to disease dies hard. Many of us think we have to watch the amount of corn even though we have heard many times that feeding trouble is most likely due to lack of desirable protein and mineral supplement.

Yellow corn is and should continue to be the largest item in any corn belt chicken starting, growing or laying mash. Not only is it the best and most desirable grain as a mash base, but it makes for increased mash consumption by the hens. This means that minerals and desirable protein will be consumed in amounts large enough for high egg production. Thirty to forty per cent of any laying mash should be comprised of ground yellow corn. Use corn that is well matured, weighing at least 56 pounds to the bushel and free of moldy or rotten kernels. A chick starting or growing mash can well contain 45 to 60 per cent ground yellow corn. An even higher per cent is often fed satisfactorily when the mash is partly supplemented by liquid milk or paste.

A surprising number of folks who start feeding mash to hens carefully avoid including corn as if it was detrimental or a handicap. They will use excessive amounts of ground oats and bran and then wonder why the mash isn't eaten or egg production doesn't jump up or why the hens appear so hungry, "with feed before them all the time."

The second common cause of unpalatable mashes is "too much fiber." In much of the corn belt that means "too much oats" though it is sometimes "oats and barley" or "oats plus bran" or all three.

In laying mash, there should never be a higher percentage of ground oats than corn.

Oats with the bulk of hulls removed a feed available on so many corn belt farms, does not count in this maximum. The total of unhulled oats and barley should not exceed in percentage that of corn. The more experience we have the less confidence we have in it as a poultry feed, either in mash or scratch grain. Barley simply is not relished by our poultry (unless starved to it) and its inclusion in a mash commonly makes the whole less palatable, and cuts down consumption.

Bran is still recommended for laying mashes by many experiment stations so there must be more virtue in it than our personal experience has led us to believe. Hens have always wasted mash when it contained bran. They pull it out of the hoppers and they will not eat as well as when we use shorts or middlings instead. Certainly mashes containing more than 20 per cent of bran or 40 per cent of bran plus oats are unpalatable.

Mash is frequently made unpalatable by too fine grinding of the grain ingredients. Because of the hulls, whole oats must necessarily be rather finely ground, but it is certainly unnecessary to grind corn and wheat to a flour fineness. Of course, the grains should be ground finely enough so the individual bits of kernels cannot be picked out. Properly ground corn and wheat resemble sand in size.

A mash for either winter or summer feeding, with little or no green feed, should contain high grade alfalfa meal or alfalfa. Many poultry keepers assume that if a limited is necessary, more is better. It is found that feed consumption falls off when there is more than five per cent alfalfa meal in the mash. Five per cent of low grade alfalfa may be too much.

Laying mash probably should not contain more than 7 per cent pure mineral if one wishes to avoid making it unpalatable. If one uses a ready mixed mineral containing considerable quantities of charcoal, anise and other non-mineral ingredients, the percentage can be somewhat greater without disarranging the digestive program of the hen or slowing up mash consumption. If more than 3 per cent of any laying mash should be bonemeal where the hens are expected to depend on mash for half of their ration. Whether added as a direct ingredient or in a factory mixed mineral the amount of bonemeal should be calculated and kept within the 3 per cent maximum if the mash is to be kept most palatable.

George and the South Seas

By H. LOUIS RAYBOLD

GEORGE ABBOTT was a very much engaged young man. His fiancée, pretty Sarah Makepeace, had her own loving ways of occupying his evenings and his office hours were frequently punctuated by telephone calls arranging to meet him for lunch or downtown after work on this errand and that. And because George really loved her and knew in advance what a capable, thrifty little wife she was some day going to be to him, he never thought of protesting that her apron strings were a bit tiring.

Never, that is, until that memorable night when they read aloud to one another a fascinating story of the ever alluring South seas.

When George had kissed Sarah good night three times, he turned slowly homewards. Thoughtfully, too. For the first time it struck him that there were distant lands to be seen, distant seas to be voyaged, distant peoples to be met—that is, by those who were free and had the price.

He neither was free to go, nor had the money, as far as that went. Both he and Sarah, who gave music lessons in between being engaged to him, were saving every possible cent towards a nest egg on which to marry.

When George reached his room, he found slipped under his door a white envelope addressed to himself in handwriting only faintly familiar. Curiously, he opened it, and read the letter that was enclosed.

"My dear nephew"—so read the letter—

"I'm not dead yet nor thinking of dying. But I'm playing the dead aunt to my heirs. That is, I'm giving away now what you'd probably get later, each one of you. Please spend it to gratify some secret wish."

Attached to the inner sheet by a wire clip was a folded check for $2,000.

It is significant that George did not at once telephone the good news. In a way, it made their marriage an immediate possibility and surely one would expect that any engaged young man's secret desire would lie in that direction.

On the contrary, several days went by and still George said nothing to Sarah of the windfall. If he appeared distraught the very next time he saw her, she gave no outward sign of noticing the fact.

To tell the truth, George was an enigma to himself. Here for months he had been longing to marry Sarah and now, at the instance of a silly yarn dealing largely with beating surf and honey-colored moons and dusky maidens, he was yearning to take a little trip all by himself and postpone settling down for a year or two. His unexpected legacy seemed to render legitimate this desire, yet how could he explain to Sarah?

The obvious thing to do would be to get married and then, if he must blow the money in such a way, make the journey in Sarah's company. He loved Sarah, he was insanely jealous if Sarah looked sideways at anyone else, and yet—how he wanted this last mad fling of irresponsible youth all by himself!

Suddenly he made up his mind to get it over with. He opened his mouth, shut it, cleared his throat and was about to speak when Sarah, laying down her work, leaned forward and regarded him.

"George," she said solemnly, "I've something to tell you. It's hard to say, but—well, I've changed my mind about getting married. I feel—well, before I settle down, I'd like to go somewhere, do something, see somebody—"

"See somebody—" echoed George, feeling as if the bottom of things were falling out.

"Yes," nodded Sarah, and into her eyes came a faraway ecstatic expression. "Sometimes I dream of distant lands where the off-shore surf beats on the coral reefs, where honey-colored moons rise out of a velvet ocean, and strong, bronzed men in spotless suits, white helmets and Victoria crosses on their chests—"

"Sarah!" by this time George had risen. Then, with an effort to swallow his indignation, "Just how would you do all this?" he asked.

"Well," said Sarah, "I've nearly a thousand dollars I was saving towards the house and—"

"And you'd use that!"

"Perhaps when I come back," said Sarah gently, "I'll not mind marrying you. But first—oh, I want one last mad fling!" Rising, she threw her slender arms towards the ceiling.

Then she found herself seized and her arms falling, fell on George's shoulders.

"Sarah," he was saying sternly. "Enough of this nonsense! I've just been left $2,000 by an aunt who isn't dead yet and we are going to be married at once. Tell me you do love me!"

So Sarah told him she did love him. What she did not tell him was that any girl knows when her lover has something on his mind and intuition plus some guess work will soon help her discover what it is.

Three weeks later, George's aunt received a letter.

"Dear Aunt:
"Your welcome gift made possible a trip to Niagara falls, a lovely little blue runabout, and first payment on a five-room bungalow."

That's the cash income from eggs for the months of October, November and December, of one of our local customers who bought 500 Larger Leghorn chicks last spring.

And you can duplicate or better these results THIS YEAR There's 40 million less hens in the country to produce eggs for storage this spring. The present low egg price and money shortage is causing a lot of flocks to be sold for meat. A flock of 175 leg-horn pullets laying 90 eggs per day was sold for meat here Tuesday. Most flocks are being culled more closely than ever before.

Larger Leghorn chicks have 12 years of trapnesting back of them, together with three direct importations of breeding cockerels from the world famous Tom Barron strain of Cathforth, England. WEEK OF JANUARY 31

The week beginning January 31st is expected to be rather good in most parts of the state. Temperatures at the very beginning will be rising above normal points.

We look for some showers or snow flurries during the early days of this week, but weather conditions will soon clear off, or at least, the moisture conditions will dry up. It is our idea the weather conditions during all the week except the very beginning and the very end will be generally favorable for most all outdoor farm work.

At the very beginning of the week there will be some light snow flurries or showers of rain and at the close of the week temperatures will be about seasonal and threatening.

Ground Hog Is Coming

We wonder, sometimes, if the ground hog does not get tired of publicity as must some of our active public men. It is one thing to be written about and discussed in all the papers, but when one seeks ones private life, we wonder if that is not carrying it too far. All over the country on February 2nd this year, Mr. Ground Hog will be sought and interviewed. His front door will be closely watched to see whether he comes out or shows timidity and refuses to run. All because it has been said that if the ground hog saw his shadow on this day, he would stay abed six more weeks during which time there would be a continuation of winter.

There are two similar statements in poetry as follows:

"If Candlemas Day be fair and clear, There'll be two winters in that one year."

And also: "If Candlemas Day be clear and bright Winter'll have another flight; But if Candlemas Day be clouds and rain, Winter is gone, and will not come again."

Dinner Stories

First Hand Information

In a small village in Ireland, the mother of a soldier met the village priest, who asked her if she had had news. "Sure, I have," she said. "Pat has been killed."

"Oh, I am very sorry," said the priest. "Did you receive word from the war office?"

"No," she said, "I received word from himself."

The priest looked perplexed, and said, "But how is that?"

"Sure," she said, "here is the letter; read it yourself."

The letter read: "Dear Mother—I am now in the Holy Land."

This Is on the Republicans

A Democrat from Kansas was going through the Carlsbad Caverns. The guide said: "It took millions of years for this great cavern to be made."

The Kansas Democrat said: "I did not know that it was a Republican administration contract."

Yes, He Learned Young

While crossing a common, an old woman noticed one of those men who go around jabbing a pointed stick into scraps of paper in order to gather them up.

Stopping beside him, she said kindly: "Don't you find that work very tiring?"

"Not very, mum," replied the man. "You see, I was born to it—my father used to harpoon whales."

Made specially for BABIES and CHILDREN

Physicians tell us that one condition is nearly always present when a child has a digestive upset, a starting cold or other little ailment. Constipation. The first step towards relief is to rid the body of impure wastes. And for this nothing is better than genuine Castoria! Castoria is a pure vegetable preparation made specially for babies and children. This means it is mild and gentle; that it contains no harsh drugs, no narcotics. Yet it always gets results! You never have to coax children to take Castoria. Real Castoria always bears the name:

MAD LAUGHTER

A THRILLING MYSTERY STORY + by MILES BURTON

CHAPTER V

"I'd better begin by explaining who I am," said Dick Penhampton. "I'm Lord Hardway's brother-in-law; he married my sister Daphne ten years ago. They live in one of those old-fashioned houses in Woodbridge Square. I don't suppose I need tell you anything about Hardway, Inspector. You probably know all about him."

The Inspector nodded. Lord Hardway, though never forcing himself into the public eye, was a fairly well known man. He had held one or two minor parts in the Government, and his speeches in the House of Lords were always listened to with respect. Socially, Lady Hardway was a very appeared between eight o'clock and midnight," remarked Brooks. "The fog was at its thickest between eight and nine, during which period the burglar might have got into the house unobserved. Well, sir, if I may say so, I think it would be best for me to go round to Woodbridge Square at once."

"I'll take you round there now," replied Dick.

The two men took a taxi, and in a short time were closeted in the study with Lord Hardway, who showed himself most affable and ready to help. "It's an awful nuisance about this necklace, Inspector," he said. "It's not so much its intrinsic value—it's popular hostess, and she and her husband were always to be seen at the more exclusive functions. While not overpoweringly rich, they possessed enough to gratify their excellent tastes, and to contribute largely to such charities as appealed to them.

Seeing the Inspector's nod, Dick continued, "As you probably know, my sister entertains a good deal. The house is usually full of people and that sort of thing. But, as it happens, they had no engagements last night, and rang me up to come and dine with them. I had better explain that I am a bachelor, and live in rooms just off Jermyn Street. They dine at a quarter past eight, and I meant to reach the house just before then. As a matter of fact, I was a few minutes late, owing to the fog. We did not sit down to dinner till twenty-five minutes past. After dinner, we went into Hardway's study—my sister usually sits there with him when she is alone—and stayed there for the rest of the evening. I left the house before midnight and walked home."

"Now, among the Hardway possessions is an extremely valuable, and, to my mind, exceedingly ugly diamond necklace. It is supposed to contain some of the stones of Marie Antoinette's famous necklace, which was stolen by the La Mottes. They, you remember took it to pieces, and sold many of the stones in London. This necklace is kept in a concealed safe let into the wall in my sister's bedroom. There are two keys to this safe. One Hardway keeps on his bunch, the other is deposited at the bank."

"Last night, when my sister was dressing for dinner, she borrowed Hardway's key and opened the safe to take out some other jewelry. The necklace was there in its case, and was seen by both my sister and her husband, who was in the room at the time. Hardway himself closed the safe and locked it, under my sister's eyes. This would be at about a quarter to eight."

Inspector Brooks, listening attentively, formed a very good opinion of Dick Penhampton. He had a gift for stating the essential facts, without burdening his story with a mass of irrelevant detail.

"My sister went to bed a few minutes after I left the house," continued Dick. "It was about half-past twelve when she put the light out. She noticed nothing unusual in her room. She was called by her maid at eight o'clock this morning. On the maid drawing the curtains, she noticed that the hasp of the window had been wrenched open, and told my sister. Hardway immediately opened the safe with his key. The necklace and its case had gone. Nothing else had been touched."

"Lady Hardway heard no disturbance in the night?" suggested the Inspector.

"None whatever," replied Dick. "And, as it happens, she is a very light sleeper."

"Then the necklace probably dis-insured, of course—but its sentimental value. The stones have a history, and no others could have the same interest. You'll put me under an eternal obligation if you can trace it for me."

"I'll do my best, my lord," replied Brooks. "I should like to ask a few questions if I may."

"Fire away," said Lord Hardway. "In the first place, how many people knew the secret of the safe?" began Brooks.

Lord Hardway smiled, rather ruefully. "It's difficult to say. The safe isn't exactly secret. It is rather hidden, as you will see presently when I show it to you. I've no doubt all the servants know of it! There are seven of them; Phelps, the butler, two footmen and four maids. Several of our friends have seen it, too. I wouldn't say how many."

"Have your servants been with you long, my lord?" inquired the Inspector.

"It's an amazing thing to be able to say these days," replied Lord Hardway, "but we haven't had a new servant in the house for the last four years. Four years ago one of our housemaids left us to join her sister in South America and we took another in her place, the daughter of one of my gamekeepers in the country, whom I have known since she was born. The rest of them have been with us since we were married."

"You employ no casual labor about the house, charwoman and so forth?" asked Brooks.

"No. The regular domestic staff seem able to cope with the situation," replied Lord Hardway. "The only stranger we have had in the place was a very decent fellow called Clarke. A couple of months ago one of the footmen had to go away suddenly to his father, who was very ill. This man Clarke came round, looking for a job, and I took him on."

"Phelps was very pleased with him; he did all the donkey work about the house, and turned out to be a very handy man. I might have taken him on permanently, but after he had been with us about three weeks he came to me and told me that his brother in Wigan, who had a shop, wanted him to help with the business. We were all very sorry when he went."

Something like the ghost of a smile passed over the Inspector's face. "Was this man Clarke a native of Lancashire, my lord?" he asked.

"Good gracious, no!" exclaimed Lord Hardway. "He was a thoroughbred cockney, if I ever saw one. Why?"

"It struck me as curious that his brother should have a shop in Wigan," replied Brooks. "Well, my lord, I think that is all I need trouble you with at present. Perhaps you would permit me to examine the safe and the outside of the house?"

The Inspector spent the rest of the morning examining the house and questioning the servants. It was not until the afternoon that he returned to Scotland Yard to make his report to the Assistant Commissioner.

"Well, Brooks, what do you make of it?" asked that official cheerfully.

"It's perfectly plain up to a point, sir," replied Brooks. "I'd like to ask you a question before I tell you what I have done, if you won't think me impertinent, sir."

CHAPTER VI

Sir Edric Conway was extremely popular at the Yard. His subordinates knew that he trusted them, and that he allowed no rigid interpretation of discipline to act as a bar between him and them. He laughed at the Inspector's rather hesitating question.

"Ask me anything you like, Brooks," he replied. "I will admit that I have dined with Lord and Lady Hardway, but I wasn't at their house last night. I can produce a perfect alibi, if you have any suspicions."

"It's not that, sir," replied Brooks. "I only wondered why Mr. Penhampton came here to see you about the matter. I should have thought Lord Hardway himself—"

"Oh, that's easily explained," said Sir Edric. "Dick Penhampton and I are old friends. I knew his father very well. Dick offered to come straight to me with the story as soon as his sister telephoned to him that the necklace had vanished. You didn't think that he took it, did you?"

"No, sir. I believe I know who took it, though I don't know where it is now," replied Brooks. "I only asked the question because it seemed odd."

"Quite right," remarked Sir Edric approvingly. "You say you think you know who took it?"

"I'd like to make a few more inquiries before I say for certain, sir. As it happens, the man I suspect is under lock and key at this moment. I saw at once, as soon as I had examined the place, that it is the same old story over again. There are traces of how the man got in scattered all over the front of the house. He just climbed up to the widow of Lady Hardway's bedroom, forced the hasp, and let himself in. If it's as I think, the burglar played the old trick of getting into the house as a servant. Anyhow, a stranger had the run of the place for three weeks or so. The safe is one of those silly things hidden behind a bit of folding panelling. Anybody could open it with a skeleton key, once he knew where it was."

"Well, you seem to have got on pretty well, Brooks," remarked Sir Edric. "What are you going to do next?"

"Circulate a description of the stones, sir," replied Brooks. "I expect that whoever has got the necklace will break it up and try to sell the stones abroad. Then I'm going to trace the movements of the man I suspect, and if he was the burglar, find out what he has done with the stuff."

"The safe is one of those silly things hidden behind a bit of folding panelling."

Sir Edric nodded. "Do whatever you think best, Brooks," he said. "You had better turn over anything else you have on hand to some one else, Polard for choice, and stick to this necklace business until you get to the bottom of it."

Brooks left the Assistant Commissioner's office and went to his own room to think over what he had learned. That Pussy Herridge was the perpetrator of the crime he had no doubt. It would be easy enough to prove that he had posed as Clarke; Phelps the butler could identify him if necessary. Brooks smiled as he reflected upon the crass stupidity of the ordinary professional crook. Herridge had no doubt heard of the name of Wigan in some comic allusion and the name had stuck in his mind.

Herridge's identity with Clarke being established, it would be a fair assumption that he had taken the necklace. The point was, what had he done with it, and what was the true explanation of his handcuff adventure? The most likely theory was that more than one man was in the plot. Herridge had removed the necklace from the safe in Woodbridge Square and had taken it to some prearranged rendezvous. Here his accomplices had met him, and, determined to secure his share of the booty for themselves, had made off with the necklace, leaving him gagged and handcuffed. Herridge had escaped and been arrested by the policeman at Pentonville.

Brooks smiled as he realized Herridge's predicament. He could not put the police on the track of his confederates without admitting that he had himself stolen the necklace. On the other hand, every day that he spent in gaol lessened his chances of being able to track them down and secure his share of the booty, as he would almost certainly have done had he not been arrested. And then the Inspector was struck with an idea. Why not let Pussy guide him to the necklace? Set the man at liberty and shadow him night and day?

He sat back in his chair and considered the matter in all its bearings. "That's the dodge!" he exclaimed. "I'll set about it tomorrow. I think the much-injured Pussy is better; out of the way until I've finished my job this evening. With a bit of luck I might learn a thing or two."

That evening, shortly after 6 o'clock, Inspector Brooks sauntered into the District station at Westminster and took a train eastwards. He had made no attempt to disguise himself; indeed, his burly frame scarcely lent itself to any of the usual, and futile, methods.

He left the train at Mark Lane, and walked slowly across Tower Hill, stopping to admire the Port of London Authority building, which loomed up, huge and graceful, in the rich grey haze of the December evening. Then, leaving the approach to the Tower Bridge on his right hand, he turned into the dark entrance of Katherine Way.

At once he seemed to leave London behind him. The thronging crowds, hurrying from the city homewards, disappeared as if by magic, their place taken by the solitude of the warehouses on either side of him. Now and then a heavy lorry lumbered past him, laden with bales of some mysterious merchandise, or stood driverless outside the dimly lighted window of a public house. Men slouched past him, broad-shouldered forms, whose peculiar bowed walk showed them to be dock laborers. The roar of London came faintly to his ears, punctuated at intervals by the insistent hooting of some impatient tug upon the river.

As he went still further eastward a broad shaft of light struck across the darkness of the road, intensifying the illusion of it being a deep and narrow cleft between towering cliffs. A wide door stood open, and Brooks paused to contemplate the entrance. A vast pillared hall stretched away, seemingly to infinity, its further extremity shrouded in a luminous haze. Bales and crates filled it, arranged in fantastic piles suggesting the curious grouping of some futuristic architect. And, from the open door came a strange heart-stirring scent, conveying subtly the whole magic of the East.

Inspector Brooks smiled as he inhaled it. He knew the hall for what it was, merely one of the warehouses surrounding St. Katherine Dock. But how little Londoners knew of the marvels of their own city! Here, not more than three or four miles from the fastidious Western civilization of Woodbridge Square was this dark canyon, fringed with the treasure houses of the world.

Justice Rules to Protect Public

Parasites who feed on the advertising of wide awake manufacturers and pirates who trail along merchandising paths with their "just as goods" and imitations of nationally known advertised standards have run into trouble. Supreme Court Justice Wasservogel of New York City has granted an injunction against 37 druggists, drug peddlers and itinerant dealers, restraining them from selling counterfeits of "Pyramidon," which is the Metz trademark for their brand of amidopyrine.

Justice Wasservogel's sweeping decision aimed at those copyists who seek to profit by the advertising of others was a judicial record breaker. Louis Boehm, counsel for Metz Laboratories, the complainant, commenting on that fact, says: "The purpose of this injunction is to protect the public and to make sure that buyers are not fooled into getting an imitation product. It is the first great conquest in the campaign waged by reputable drug manufacturers to stamp out traffic in imitation and illicit drugs which might endanger the health of the buyer."

The injunctions were granted against H. G. Knoll & Co., Utility Drug Products, Inc., State Drug Company and Bronx Sundry Co.

Jesse James Story Is Believed by Man

The claims of an aged Missourian that he is Jesse James are probably true, it is said by Charles Price, 65, of Ann Arbor, formerly a cowpuncher and an acquaintance of Frank James, brother of the noted bandit. Price, a resident of Ann Arbor for 15 years, has long believed that the man buried as Jesse James was in reality Tom Howard, a member of James' gang, and the confusion in the names was due to James' liberal use of names.

Price states he met a man who gave the name of Frank Percy in Montana several years after the death of James and was later told that the man was James. Percy left the ranch suddenly, he states, and was afterward sought by United States officers. James in reality was far less of a desperado than the modern gangster, Price avers.

Paroles Looming for 25 Jackson Convicts

Sixty-seven inmates of Michigan state prison appeared for parole hearings before Deputy Parole Commissioner M. D. Kirby, but paroles will be recommended for only 25, Kirby stated at the conclusion of his hearings.

John W. Miner, chairman of the state prison commission, announced that inmate employment will be one of the chief topics before the board when it meets in Detroit. Nearly 3,000 of the 5,700 men in the Jackson institution are idle, it was stated.

FAMOUS WOMEN ARE SCHEDULED FOR FARM WEEK

Seven women of outstanding importance in their fields have been procured as speakers for the Homemakers' section of Farmers' Week at Michigan State college to be held during the first week of February, according to Dr. Marie Dye, dean of home economics.

Dr. Agnes Tilson of the Merrill-Palmer school in Detroit is to speak on "Parents as Educators" on Tuesday morning, February 2. Miss Catherine Cleveland of the Cotton-Textile institute of New York City will also speak on this date, her subject to be "Cotton Fabrics for Spring Fashions." As recently announced, Miss Myrtle Weldon, state home demonstration agent of Kentucky, is to give the main address at the banquet on Tuesday evening. Her subject will be "The Ten Homemaker's Commandments."

"The Canning of Meat" is to be discussed Wednesday morning, February 3, by Miss Meta Given of the National School of Pressure Cookery in Eau Claire, Wis., and "Ideals for Family Life" by Miss Lucile Reynolds, connected with the Farmer's Wife, St. Paul, Minn.

Two speakers are scheduled for Thursday morning also. Miss Olive Sewell, executive secretary of the Michigan State Nurses association, will talk on "Nursing in the Home," and Miss Ruth Atwater of the National Cannery's association of Washington, D. C., on "The Application of Research in the Canned Food Industry to Consumer Needs."

Several exhibits are being planned for the interest of the attendants and two style shows will be featured, one displaying adult garments and the other clothes for young children. Considerable time is being allowed during the week for individual conferences.

Seventeen Receive U. of M. Scholarships

Seventeen University of Michigan students have been announced as recipients of scholarships in the College of Literature, Science and the Arts, with awards ranging from $600 to $50.

Those receiving the Simon Mandelbaum Scholarship of $600 each, were Harold F. Fall of Detroit, Earl H. Fellhauer, Ann Arbor, and John C. Poole, Tulsa, Oklahoma. The John Marsh Scholarships of $50 of $100 each, went to Vivien N. Bullock, Ann Arbor, $100; Juanita Weller, Ann Arbor, $50; and Richard S. Campbell, Ludington, $100; Fanny Marsh Scholarships, also $100 each, went to Dorothy Daniels, Jackson, and Vincent DiPasquale, Buffalo, New York.

Henry Strong Scholarships of $50 or $100 were received by Walter M. Bury, Detroit, $50; Marian L. Heald, Ann Arbor, $50; Neil W. Macintyre, St. Clair, $100; Wilber J. ### Company Organized By Manual Training Pupils at Newaygo

The manual training department of Newaygo High school has departed from the usual way in the ninth grade woodworking class by organizing a company with a board of directors. The executive board is represented by President Raymond Minogue, Vice President Ellsworth Anderson, Secretary-Treasurer Clare Rowe and inspectors and departmental foreman.

The title of the concern is the Hill-top Bookcase Co. The purpose of the organization is to make oak bookcases for grade rooms in the school. Each pupil will start at an average wage which will vary from time to time, according to his ability and speed. At the end of the production period the pupil instead of receiving a mark will receive a pay check.

Ottawa County Plans Child Health Contest

A health contest in which prizes will be awarded to highest rated children is being sponsored by the Ottawa county health unit, which has for its goal the examination of every child before school entrance and three times in the school term.

According to Dr. Ralph TenHave, county health commissioner, the proposed contest will cover physical condition, health habits, immunization and vaccination against contagious diseases.

Bargain Day

Mrs. Jones decided to buy a new hat, and visited her favorite hat shop. After she had tried on about thirty, she suddenly spotted one she liked.

"Yes," she said, "this will do nicely. Will you please send it along as soon as possible?"

"I will if you like, madam," answered the assistant, "but it is the one you had on when you came in."

Charmers of History

By M. H. TILLITT

Theodosia was the daughter of the noted Aaron Burr.

From her father she inherited brilliancy of intellect and a magnetic personality in her earlier years, she was given every advantage of instruction and culture that wealth could provide.

After her mother's death, Theodosia Burr—though then only in her teens—is said to have presided with rare grace as hostess in her father's home. And it is written of her that the brilliant and great men who were then numbered among the guests in Burr's home marveled at the child's fine intellect and sparkling wit.

Burr idolized his daughter. He might have been hard and ruthless at times in his dealings with the outside world, but to Theodosia he was always a devoted father.

And in return, Theodosia idolized her father. To her he was altogether noble and admirable.

That idolization of her father by Theodosia was not to be shaken. It held in the face of all the ugly charges that were from time to time made against him. She was always to be found by his side in time of need.

It was to visit the father whom she loved so dearly that she embarked in 1812 on the voyage that was to carry her to death.

At that time she was the wife of Governor Allston of South Carolina to whom she had been married eleven years before. And she took passage on a vessel bound for New York—where she knew her father was anxiously waiting for her.

That was the last ever seen of Theodosia Burr by those who loved her. Her fate was never known. She may never have her with him again—and may have been murdered by pirates—but this is mere conjecture.

The loss of his daughter broke Burr's spirit and crushed his heart—he refused to believe that he would never have her with him again—and daily through his remaining years he was to be seen pacing to and fro along the Battery front—watching for the ship on which she had sailed to come in.

Theodosia Burr—born in 1783—died (or disappeared at sea) in 1812.

Whitehall Debaters Win, Montague Loses

The Montague debate team lost to Whitehall by a two to one decision. Montague now has six points. The Montague team is composed of Helen Soble, Marian Roberts and Margaret Runzel.

The Whitehall team won a unanimous decision over Rockford, giving Whitehall 11 points. The Whitehall team is composed of Julia Austin, Betty Blank and Amy Jean Holmblad.

Modes and Manners

Question: "What is the proper way to serve fruit? Does one place a bowl of fruit on the table and, having provided individual plates and knives for the guests, let it go at that? Or is there some formality to be observed?"—Mrs. F. A.

Answer: If friends drop around informally, fruit is served as you suggest. But for formal occasions, each guest gets an individual serving on a dessert plate and that's all. As second helpings are not in order at such functions, a large bowl of fruit does not appear in the center of the table.

Almond Blossom

By Edwin Arnold

Blossoms of the almond trees,
April's gift to April's bees,
Birthday ornament of spring,
Flora's fairest daughter,
Coming where no flowerets dare,
Trust the cruel outer air
When the royal king-cup bold
Dares not don his coat of gold
And the sturdy blackthorn spray
Keeps his silver from the May;
Coming when no flowerets would,
Save thy lowly sisterhood,
Early violets, blue and white,
Dying for their love of light,
Almond blossom sent to teach us,
That the spring days soon will reach us,
Lest, with longing over-ried,
We die as the violets died—
Blossom clouding all the tree
With thy crimson broidery,
Long before a leaf of green
On the bravest bough is seen,
Oh, when winter winds are swinging,
All thy red bells into ringing,
With a bee in every bell,
Almond blossom, we greet thee well.

"Perfect" Apple Pies For Every Occasion

I think the most popular American dessert is apple pie. Watch the men of your family when they eat at a restaurant or lunch counter. Nine times out of ten don't they order apple pie or apple pie and cheese for dessert?

Yet apple pie is much abused. Few women really make good apple pies, although the technique is very simple and easily learned. A tender, flaky crust is needed to begin with.

Either pastry or general purpose flour may be used for pie crusts. The proportions are about the same. There are several kinds of shortening that may be used with equal success—chicken fat, mixtures of lard and butter, vegetable shortenings or even oils. The latter requires a special method and solid fats are usually more successful.

Recipes for crusts vary somewhat, but generally the proportions are: for each cup of flour use one-half teaspoon salt, one-fourth to one-third cup shortening and two tablespoons cold water. If you want a rich pastry use the larger proportion of shortening. Sift the flour once before measuring, then sift again with the salt. Work in the shortening, either with the fingers or with knives and when the mass looks like coarse meal, add the water, ice cold if possible. Add just a little to each portion of the mixture and toss the dough just enough to hold it together. The quicker and less handling the better the crust that results.

For a particularly flaky crust, save out about a third of the fat, soften and cream it, then roll out the dough and spread with the shortening. Fold the dough over once, roll out and spread with the rest of the fat. Fold again, roll out and line your pie tins. Set them in the ice box while you pare and core the apples.

All apples will not make good pies; some become mushy and soft, others tough and tasteless. A good eating apple like Northern Spy, Rome Beauty, Greening or Baldwin is best for good pies. Slice the apples very thin so they will cook evenly and quickly. Sprinkle the bottom of the pie crust with half a cup of sugar and fill with the thinly sliced apples. Sprinkle with cinnamon, nutmeg, grated lemon rind and another half cup of sugar (the amount of sugar depends on the artness of the apples; there is no definite rule).

Lastly, dot the apples liberally with a sweet flavored butter, then roll out the top crusts. Moisten the edges of the lower crust with cold water and place the top crust over it. Crimp the edges together with the fingers or with a fork to make a tight seal all around the pie. Cut off the overhanging dough, leaving plenty on the pie. Prick good sized holes in the top crust to allow the steam to escape. Bake in a hot oven for ten minutes, then reduce the heat and make until the apples feel tender when a toothpick is inserted in one of the holes of the crust.

For pies for the children—or grownups occasionally—bake single small crusts and just at serving time fill them with tasty apple sauce, cover with a meringue or place marshmallows on top and brown.

Suggestions

To clean fur, first sponge it well with gasoline to loosen the dirt. If it is very soiled, rub in cornmeal while the fur is still damp, then beat out the meal, and brush the fur thoroughly. Finish by hanging the fur in the sunshine for several hours.

A little floor wax thoroughly rubbed on the window sills will cause them to stay clean much longer.

Furniture polishes, waxes and cleaners can easily be prepared at home.

Games to Play

Grocery Store

The player who is "It" thinks of something sold in a grocery store, such as rice. He starts the game by saying, "My father runs a grocery store and sells something beginning with 'r.'" Each child guesses something sold in a grocery store, the first letter of which is "r," such as raisins, rutabagas, etc. The one who guesses rice is "It" for the next game.

Bean Bag Spelling

The players arrange themselves in a circle with the leader in the center. The leader tosses a bean bag to one of the players and calls out a word as he does so. That player must catch the bean bag and spell the word. If he fails to catch the bag or to spell the word correctly, he is out of the game. The player who stays in the game longest is the winner.

You and Your Child

By JANE HERBERT GOWARD

Pity the Lone Child

It is quite a responsibility to be the first-born in a family. One is doomed to be a model for the brothers and sisters that follow, no matter how he himself may happen to turn out.

I have often thought it a pity, too, that parents do not consider this problem while there is still just an only child in the family. If they did, there would be no spoiled youngsters. Parents would regard it as their sacred duty to save the first born for his unborn brothers and sisters. They would concern themselves with training him for the future and the full responsibilities of an individual. They would watch themselves and exert themselves to be careful of the examples they set in all their dealings with him.

Except in cases of twins and triplets, families must start out with a single child. But once a family is begun, it must be finished. As everyone knows, three is not company. There must be a fourth member, and as many more as the family bank roll and nature deem wise. After a family reaches the sum total of four members, additions thereto becomes something of a luxury, but two parents and one child need another to make the family circle complete.

All of which leads to the question, how soon after the arrival of the first child should the second one come? Any time within the next few years, is the answer which trained experts and psychologists give us. And while this is the scientific conclusion, any set of parents who take the business of family life seriously, can arrive at the same answer via the common sense route.

Thus the first born does not have too long a period in which to become selfish and demanding. It is the inexperienced way of all flesh to unnecessarily pamper "firsts" among children. Some psychologists call these unforunately, experimental children. And in truth, they are. The average couple, and they constitute the majority, are totally unprepared for parenthood until they have practiced first on some little child. Then along comes Child No. 2 and reaps the benefits of experience gathered by the parents from dealings with Child No. 1.

If there is no second baby, then all this knowledge is wasted. But worse still, the only child is doomed to remain just "an only child" for the rest of his days. The beginnings of certain anti-social habits and impressions, which having a little brother or sister with whom to share parents and home would have nipped in the bud, now will not be checked.

His parents are just as habit forming as he. So while he is developing in a very definite manner, his parents who really know better, are the slaves of habit, too. And unless something unforeseen startles them out of their uncomfortable grooves, the whole family, all three of them, become firmly entrenched in the narrow sphere. Possessiveness flashes back and forth, with occasional spurts of defiance between them. Each feels that he has claims upon the others. There is no polite sense of laissez faire.

Should it happen for some reason, that parents cannot have any more children of their own, they still have a duty to their only born. They must save him from an empty life of "firstness." They must adopt a little baby brother or sister, but preferably the latter, while he is three or four and before he is six, as by then it will be too late for him to benefit from the relationship.

A little sister is recommended for the brother, and a little brother for the sister, because the matter of sex difference is very necessary for happy social adjustment, particularly in cases of adoptions.

Your Handwriting— and What It Tells

By JANET WINTON

MORE BLUSTER THAN FIGHT

"Dear Janet Winton: In what way do you believe I would make the most success?—P. T., Nashville, Tenn."

The loop within the loop formation, illustrated in pronoun "I" is a mark of one-sidedness. Persons who write in this manner are usually easy to read, as some single outstanding characteristic rules their lives, deciding a about you. Their reactions to you decides your reactions to the world in general. You have an original turn of mind, but your interests are too diffused to allow for deep thinking or concentration.

Change, excitement, action—these are the things you live for. You love freedom, and for one of your nature there is a definite need for freedom. But on the other hand, there is your hat worn in I would most success

definite course of action. Among other things "I" show that you do not take to criticism kindly. You believe yourself to be destined to lead and, consequently, above reproach.

Enthusiasm and impulsiveness are reflected in an uphill trend. Combined with bold, large writing I know you to be physically fearless. There are few things which you haven't the courage to face. Underscored words are a commonplace occurrence in your handwriting, revealing a tendency to elaborate. This, plus talkativeness, plus individualistic pronoun "I," clearly shows a flair for oratory.

It is well known that those with the best minds are not always the best declaimers. There is a law of compensation. Nature makes up for any lack, in an overdose of something else and vice versa. And so, while it was startling to discover marked sensitiveness in such a dashing, daring script, it is just further proof of nature's fairness and the accuracy of her plan.

You are touchy, easily upset and hurt, and quickly influenced by others reactions. Your moods are controlled by the human barometers you see ego. It thrives upon attention and so you must adhere to many conventions which your nature would be happier without.

Some of us grow strong from suffering and hard luck. We learn what to avoid in the future and how to bear our troubles with the least amount of annoyance to others and to ourselves. You are the type of individual who breaks down at the first frown of fortune. You can't stand failure. You, who seemed the strongest in happy times, confident and adventurous, are the first to give way to despair when the wind of chance blows against you.

A man of your temperament would find happiness only in a capacity where he shows up to the best advantage. It must be a dressed up job, where he can look his best and act his best. Salesmanship or publicity work are fields in line with your talents. You like to hobnob with bosses and celebrities. For, if you yourself cannot be outstanding, you are satisfied with the next best—to rub shoulders with those who are and to receive recognition for your associations, if for nothing else.

Speaking of Style

The Washington note has been sounded by the Paris couturier and since we have no designers of our own when this distinguished couple occupied the White House, the Parisian touch cannot be said to be inappreciate.

If the Washingtons might not recognize themselves in the 1932 version of their costume preferences but a good deal of their dignity has been preserved nevertheless.

The blue and buff of the Continental Army is sure to march on us "come spring." Blues are already very much in evidence in advance collections and all the fashion world is talking beige in its many tonal possibilities among which one may, of course, include buff.

It is the Louis XVI hat that French millionaires are intent on reviving at this time. That Agnes, among others succeeds in making use of the characteristic silhouette of this period effect is really achieving a period effect is one of the interesting commentaries on millinery trends.

We used to smile at draperies and feel very superior about them. They were all very well in Godley's Ladies' Book illustrations but were not to be thought of in action. And now look at us! Style sleuths cannot quite make up their minds whether it is the skirt or the bodice that is most important. With shoulder lines and sleeves doing things to flag our attention we are apt to miss the draperies and peplums and so on that are occurring below the belt.
