ASK PACHE GROWER TEST NEW VARIETY

These youth growers who have been looking for a variety of fruit which is worthy of Ellendale and which has the qualities which will make a good market piece are advised by the department of horticulture at Michigan State College to try limited plantings of a new variety, the Beechnut. This variety is the result of a cross between the Hale and the South Haven. The crossing and the subsequent testing of the variety were done at the South Haven experimental farm, where crops of fruit have been harvested from new trees with this variety for several years.

Beechnut pears were at the same time as South Haven but the fruit is much larger, colored and the color appears while the peach is still soft enough that it should be a good market piece. The fruit is larger and the flesh is firmer and juicier. Under all conditions of acid and weather the fruit is of the highest grade and is superior to the cup and the quality of the fruit as the result of the variety was excellent.

Within the next five years the homegrown fruit grower as a century of production for himself may be forced to make several moves to adapt to the increasing trend of specialization and increased demand for more and better fruits. In a recent issue of the Bulletin No. 38 issued by the Wisconsin Agricultural Society this problem is described in detail. The bulletin shows that the demands for fresh fruits are increasing at a rate of 6% per year and that the demand for fresh fruits will continue to increase at this rate for the next 25 years. The bulletin also states that a concerted effort should be made to promote the feeding of fresh fruits to the consumer.

Aply demonstrating the virtues of patriotism that sprung during the struggle with China is the picture showing a line of Japanese women outside a government building in Tokyo, prepared to volunteer for war service in the city. The initiative won a sweeping public favor; because of this national feeling.

The News
A Thrilling Mystery Story

by MURIEL BURTON

WEEK OF MARCH 27

The show will begin in February in the West End of London and continue until Monday, when it will close the playhouse.

Theatregoers will be able to see the play for a week in London and in the provinces, including Manchester, Liverpool, and Birmingham. The play received a mixed reception from the critics, with some praising the acting and staging, while others found it to be lacking in plot and character development.

In the meantime, the production is scheduled to tour the United States, with performances planned in New York, Chicago, and Los Angeles.

The cast includes well-known actors and actresses, including the leading lady, who has been lauded for her dramatic abilities.

The play is an adaptation of a novel by the same author, and has been described as a "fast-paced, thrilling mystery with a surprise ending." The story revolves around a group of people who become involved in a series of events that lead to a shocking revelation.

The play is scheduled to be broadcast on television later this year, with a live audience in attendance at the studio. The cast and crew have been working tirelessly to bring the production to life, with rehearsals taking place every day.

The play is expected to be a major box office success, and is already generating buzz among theatre-goers and critics alike. Fans of the novel will be eager to see how the story unfolds on stage, and newcomers to the genre will be captivated by the thrilling performances and engaging storyline.

Don't miss your chance to see this exciting new production. Tickets are on sale now, and are sure to sell out quickly. Don't wait, book your tickets today!
ALL CHILDREN "PROBLEM CHILDREN"

The perfectly good boy or girl, who never does anything wrong, or even seems to want to do anything wrong, and would be a freak if he didn't, constitutes President Jane Herbert Goward's concern, director of research and child development in the University of Michigan. From a close study of the characters and characteristics of 1,000 children taken at random from a list of children that all are "problem children" it is evident that the "average" child, as defined by the psychologists, is badly adjusted to the world around him to those exceptionally well adjusted. The great majority of children are morbidly interesting. Between the extremes, the "average" morbidly interesting and perfectly normal, lies the group with the habits of adult society in a world which is too big for them and their life in the wrong way.

The average child, for instance, gets his self-esteem through being in the majority. He is out of the minority, and he goes about his business as if he were. To the average child the absence of self-esteem is one of the most serious conditions of the human condition.

All children, and many more than children, are a problem. It is in the social structure that the emotional disorder is created, and it is in the social structure that it is to be alleviated. It is evident that the social structure is very inadequate.

The work of Jane Herbert Goward is to bring children from the normal, normal to the human, human to the normal. She has taken children from the home and office and brought them into the normal, normal to the human, human to the normal. She has brought them into the normal, normal to the human, human to the normal. She has brought them into the normal, normal to the human, human to the normal. She has brought them into the normal, normal to the human, human to the normal. She has brought them into the normal, normal to the human, human to the normal.
