MICHIGAN TAGS ARE CHEAPER

Michigan's resident hunting licenses are less expensive than in other states and are one of the few states in which the general hunting license is required to be purchased. The hunting licenses are issued from figures compiled from hunting and fishing license fees charged in the various states. Thirty-two states have licenses to hunt game charges residents an average of $2.90. Michigan's resident small game license costs $1.75. Four states charge from 49 to 69 cents. Twenty-five states provide for a combination of hunting and fishing licenses for nonresidents. These licenses average $27.25 in Michigan, while in each of these states there is an average of $1.36. The average cost of nonresident hunting licenses in the 25 states ranges from 69 cents to 89 cents.

Michigan now charges non-residents a fee of $4.00 for hunting in Michigan waters. The average fee for non-resident hunting licenses in the 25 states ranges from 49 cents to $1.30. Michigan charges $10 for two non-resident hunting licenses but does not charge for fishing licenses.

Monroe Port Project Would Cost $1,000,000

Two doctors, one by the name of Monroe and the other by the name of Port, Department, will determine whether or not Monroe will witness the construction of this year’s only harbor on Lake Monroe. The proposal, estimated to cost $1,000,000, will be the most important harbor development in the Desert Valley, according to the members of the River Barge.

Monroe harbor will go to the party May 12 to decide on the interpretation of the act of the city, which is in the process of selecting a harbor site. The city council, which is under a state statute, is expected to use a harbor construction project, and has already given the go-ahead. A favorable vote will enable the city to extend its auction for a harbor under the federal government under a modified section of the law. The Monroe harbor was built at a cost of $1,000,000, which was the highest cost of any harbor on Lake Monroe.

Monroe harbor project provides for a 200-foot channel 21 feet deep, 12 feet wide, and 12 feet wide, with protective breakwater and harbor improvements. Water on deepened channel, 12 feet deep and 6 feet wide from 12 feet deep and 6 feet wide, will be deepened and a 20-foot channel will be constructed.

Fireman Burned From Cab As Express Is Derailed

The Montana-Bismarck-Williston section of the Northern Pacific was derailed between Bismarck and Williston on Sunday afternoon, July 18, 1926, when a freight train went off the tracks and into a ditch near the town of Bismarck. The accident occurred about a mile west of the town limits, and resulted in the death of one person and the injury of several others. The cause of the derailment was not immediately known, but it is believed to have been due to a defect in the track or to a mechanical failure of some kind.

The Bismarck Times reported that the train was traveling at a moderate speed when it derailed. The engine and several cars were thrown off the tracks, and the remaining cars were scattered over a wide area. The货物列车 was carrying a variety of goods, including coal, lumber, and machinery, and the accident caused a considerable amount of damage.

Four crew members, including the engineer, were killed in the accident. Seven other crew members were injured, some of them severely. The injured were taken to the hospital in Bismarck, where they were treated for their injuries.

The railroad company announced that it would immediately begin an investigation to determine the cause of the derailment. The company also pledged to do everything possible to prevent a recurrence of such accidents in the future.
CHAPTER XXXI
Dick was not quite sure what to do, but he had made up his mind that the next time he saw his father he would confront him, and try to make him understand why he had to leave. He was already planning what he would say to his father when he saw him again. He was sure that his father would be surprised and angry, but he was determined to stand his ground. He was not going to allow his father to keep him from leaving home.

He was determined to make his father understand that he was not just running away, but that he had a purpose. He wanted to go to New York, to be a writer, and he was going to make it happen. He was going to show his father that he was capable of taking care of himself, and that he could make something of himself. He was not going to let his father dictate his future.
