URGE BRAKE ON RAVAGES OF DRAINAGE

Restoration of marshes as a conservation program means the saving of a vital resource that is in danger of being lost. The safety of the public is jeopardized by the drainage of marshes, which tend to increase the flow of water to the sea and reduce the flushing action of the tides. Moreover, the marshes themselves, possessing water and vegetation, are being used by many near-bank areas. It is therefore important that new and old marshes be kept in a condition that will not cause pollution or flooding.

The idea of marsh restoration is not new. In many cases, the marshes have been drained for agricultural purposes, but the results have been disastrous. The marshes have been turned into salt marshes, which are unsuitable for agriculture. The marshes have been turned into tidal mudflats, which are unsuitable for navigation. The marshes have been turned into tidal flats, which are unsuitable for development. The marshes have been turned into tidal marshes, which are unsuitable for recreation. The marshes have been turned into tidal salt marshes, which are unsuitable for all purposes.
