WHEATBOOMSTHEWEST

Governers and Mayors Agree that Prosperity Has Set Its Seal on the Land.

(From the New York Journal of Aug. 29, 1898, reading fiveiller again in 1898.)

A large number of representative merchants of the West have recently visited New York, and have expressed generally hopeful views of the business outlook. In view of the fact that these optimistic and hearty feelings are all the more pronounced from the fact that they have been expressed by men who are in daily contact with the wants and desires of the people, it is not surprising that the people are starting to believe in prosperity.

The building on the corner of 10th and Market Streets, recently completed, is a fine example of the progress that has been made. The building is a two-story structure, with a basement, and is constructed of good material. The ground floor is occupied by a number of fine show rooms, while the second floor is taken up by a large mercantile establishment. The building is handsomely finished, and is a credit to the city.

The people everywhere are expressing the opinion that the prosperity of the country is well-nigh complete. The stock market is on the rise, and the railroads and canals are doing well. The farmers are prosperous, and the manufacturers and merchants are doing a good business. The general feeling is that the country is on the road to prosperity.

INDIVIDUAL TESTIMONY.

Belfort's Statement on the Return of Prosperous Times.

The following statement was read by Belfort, in which he said that the return of prosperous times is the most welcome event that has occurred in the recent history of the United States:

Belfort's Statement, Aug. 29, 1898.

"In the living and the growing, the strong and the strong, I see a new trend in the national life. The country is prosperous, and the people are happy. I see a new era of progress and expansion.

"In the railroads and canals, I see a new era of development. The railroads are doing well, and the canals are flourishing. The country is on the road to prosperity.

"In the stock market, I see a new era of stability. The stock market is on the rise, and the prices of stocks are going up. I see a new era of progress and expansion.

"In the farmers, I see a new era of prosperity. The farmers are doing well, and the crops are abundant. I see a new era of progress and expansion.

"In the manufacturers and merchants, I see a new era of prosperity. The manufacturers and merchants are doing well, and the goods they make and sell are in demand. I see a new era of progress and expansion."
