WHALEY'S SHEEP-RANCH.

Whaley's stock was curious and it became proverbial: the fertility of the land would remain without end. The sheep that were grazed by the flocks in the winter were taken care of in the spring and later. But in the fall, when the sheep were sheared, the fleece that was removed could be sold for a profit. The wool from the sheep was used to make clothing, blankets and other textiles. The harvest of the sheep's wool was a significant source of income for the ranch.

In the fall, the sheep were taken to market and sold. The wool was then processed and the fleece was separated from the wool. The fleece was then cleaned, carded and spun into yarn. The yarn was then knitted or woven into fabric. The fabric was then dyed and made into clothing. The wool was a valuable resource that was used in a variety of industries. The sheep were an important part of the economy of the area and provided a steady income for the ranch.
