A FLYING SQUADRON.

"Have another cigar, Benjamin," I said, as I took one from the table and held it out to him in my hand. "I am very glad you have come to see us today. It is a beautiful day, and we are all enjoying ourselves very much."

"Thank you," he replied, "but I am afraid I cannot stay. I have an important meeting at the bank this afternoon."

I gave him the cigar, which he took with a smile. "Well, have a good time," I said. "Take care of yourself, and don't worry about anything."

"I will," he said, and walked out of the room.

I looked at the cigar, and then threw it into the fire. I was glad to see him go, for I had been feeling very depressed.

A beautiful day, I thought, as I walked over to the window. The sun was shining brightly in the sky, and the trees were waving gently in the breeze. I could hear the sound of the birds singing, and the leaves rustling under my feet.

I sat down in a chair by the window, and began to think about the meeting I had with Benjamin. He was a very important man, and I was afraid I had spoken to him in a way that might upset him.

I decided to write him a letter, and I began to work on my pen. I had a lot to say, but I was not sure how to begin.

I decided to start with a simple greeting, and I wrote:

"Dear Benjamin,"

"I hope this letter finds you well. I have been thinking a lot about our conversation, and I wanted to let you know that I was wrong.

"I am very sorry for the way I spoke to you, and I hope you will forgive me. I was out of line, and I am very sorry.

"I hope we can still be friends, and I look forward to seeing you again soon."

I sealed the letter and put it in the mailbox. I felt better now, and I was glad to have that weight off my mind.
THE STUDIOS GIRL

AN INTERESTING LETTER FROM A YOUNG LADY FROM COLLEGE.

Dear Mr. Editor:

I am writing to you as a seeker of advice. I am a student at a prestigious university, and I have been struggling with a problem that I believe you might be able to help me with.

For the past few weeks, I have been feeling increasingly anxious and overwhelmed. I have been having difficulty concentrating on my studies, and I often find myself becoming distracted by my worries. I am also experiencing a lot of stress and I am finding it difficult to manage my time effectively.

I am not sure what to do. I have tried talking to some friends about my concerns, but they do not seem to understand what I am going through. I also tried speaking with a counselor, but I feel like they are not giving me the guidance I need.

I was wondering if you could offer me any advice on how to cope with these issues. Any suggestions or recommendations would be greatly appreciated.

Sincerely,

[Name]

TO HOW ACROSS THE ATLANTIC.

Two Dutch Men in an Open Boat to Reach America.

Propositions are well made for the two men daring voyagers to each other the Atlantic in an open boat. John M. D. Robey, of Stockton, New York, writes to a friend that on April 1 he is planning to sail from New York to Europe in an open boat. The voyage is expected to last about three months. The boat will be seen within the Atlantic and will be supplied with food and water by 50 German sailors. One day will be the journey's end, and the boat will be located in the Atlantic.
