CLOSING DATE FOR APPLICATIONS 15TH APRIL 2001
Not long ago, Mrs McDivot and myself decided the unrelenting stress of being, necessitated a much needed vacation...

As it was the middle of the winter months and we were in great requirement of some change in scenery and temperature, so we chose the ever-popular semi paradise known as Tenerife and one of those late deals that allocate your destination upon arrival. Allocation on arrival always fills me with the fear of the unknown but as we had stipulated a four star hotel we were reasonably confident of meeting with a degree of success. I am glad to say we were not disappointed, as we discovered our stay was to be in a small resort in the most agreeable Hotel Los Gigantes, an establishment that catered for the mature guest and was as a result totally devoid of screaming little urchins and marauding teenagers desperate for some nocturnal activity.

We therefore settled down to a delightful week of sunbathing, coastal walking and the occasional sojourn in our little hired car to another part of the island. This particular activity I found to be most entertaining, as it involved heading in a roughly vertical direction for about half an hour up the side of a mountain along a highly precipitous road with a drop of about a thousand or so feet down the unprotected side. Some of these roads, particularly when we got to about 7,000 foot were in places already starting to make their own way down the mountainside. This added greatly to the amusement value, especially when confronted as we were on a regular basis, by oncoming vehicles approaching at about 60 mph on the wrong side of the road or dirt track as it became. I must say some of the locals seemed to inject a great deal of humour into their motoring, something that was not altogether shared by Mrs McDowit as we narrowly avoided an imminent demise on a succession of hairpin bends.

As we continued to survive each approaching hairpin bend and the weather and vegetation became indistinguishable from that found in the Southern Hemisphere, I was not surprised, but wonder if the local government officials had embraced the concept of risk assessment with quite the enthusiasm as we greenkeepers.

But upon entering our hotel, we were always greeted by the inexhaustible politeness and charm of the hotel staff and a gagganauous evening buffet that invited a degree of indulgence we would not have displayed at home. It was at the end of one of these feeding frenzies, that Mrs McDowit came over somewhat faint and proceeded to pass out in front of about 200 other diners.

The next day having regained her health, we went down to breakfast and were greeted by a number of the hotel waiters all of whom showed genuine concern for her well being following the previous night’s drama. Her own investigation of the causes of her blackout, revealed that a rare virus with an exotic sounding name like Camilla or something, had blown in on a Saharan sirocco causing a temporary lowering of her blood pressure. Personally I attributed the episode and resultant £50 doctors fee, to the effects of her success in fulfilling her personal ambition of sampling every one of the 20 or so puddings on offer that night. But using her usual powers of persuasion, it transpired that the romantic African microbe was the cause of her unconsciousness and not my theory of undiluted glutony.

As “Blackjack” embarked on a medley of poignant tit-tattas, starting with Ottywa’s “Hands up”, a song that unbeknown to me had an entire dance routine associated with it, I reflected on the quality of the headwaiter at Hotel Los Gigantes. In fact as we watched all the septuagenarians going through the routine of raising and lowering their arms in expert synchronisation as the Swedish Duo sang “Gimme your heart, gimme, gimme”, I could not help but notice how the maitre d’hotel greeted many of his more regular female guests with a kiss on the cheek. But was it the holiday atmosphere that had them swooning as he did so, or was it his polished Latino charm that enabled him to carry it off with such elegance? As I further observed the headwaiter’s skills, I began to notice the little secrets that he had at his disposal. One of them was to never choose the pretty or younger females as the focus of his attention. They were the ones that did not need the boost to their confidence that came with his smiles of affection. More astutely it was the less attractive, slightly older women that became the subject of his charm treatment and I could see they loved every second of it, as they convinced themselves that his affection towards them was genuine. But the question I asked of myself was, could his technique with the ladies be adopted to our shores?

We would then be utterly amazed at how many of the hotels senior citizens would actually get out of their wheel chairs and dance the night away with seemingly boundless energy.

We would then be utterly amazed at how many of the hotels senior citizens would actually get out of their wheel chairs and dance the night away with seemingly boundless energy.

It was while listening to I believe a rendition of “The last waltz” which they chose to sing without quite the same vocal force as deployed by Englebert Humperdinck, that I realised we were metaphorically speaking, a little further away than the 2,000 miles that separated us from the golf clubs of Britain.

The reason this hotel was on a totally different level. If we required refreshment, I did not have to go to the bar and spend ten minutes or so trying to draw the attention of the barman while he means about the house committee to some wearied member. I did not have to ring a bell and wait for some acne ridden, gormless teenager to materialise from the recesses of a darkened kitchen and produce an unintelligible grunting noise. None of your twenty minutes of pugilism here that are required to purchase a half pint of lager following the June medal back home. No, the technique needed to get served at Hotel Los Gigantes was to glance around and raise a digit for about one second before an immaculately dressed head barman would glide over, smiling to the other guests as he went and produce a note book ready to take your order. He would then pass this to one of the many barmen that were omnipresent around the hotel while he moans about the house committee and produce a note book ready to take your order. Now to my recollection, I have never once visited a British golf club clubhouse and received the same level of service that we received in this, a very pleasant but otherwise unexceptional hotel in Tenerife. Is it a question of economics, or is it a case of tradition being the immovable obstruction to progress on this front.

Last month I reported from Dallas and the GCSSA Conference and Show where the presence of the Association was much appreciated by all and many new contacts were made. I’d like to thank everyone, particularly the GCSSA staff and officials who did so much to make the visit enjoyable.

From Dallas I moved north to Vancouver and the Canadian equivalent where I delivered a paper on Winter Greens and the preparation of them. To summarize, I said that if all the money that was spent preparing temporary or alternative greens was spent on the main greens you wouldn’t need the alternatives. If the weather was so bad that the greens were unplayable the course shouldn’t be open. I think the paper was well received, particularly when I moved on to talk about the history of Walton Heath and James Braid.

I thoroughly enjoyed the CGSA Show, everyone was extremely friendly and the Show so well organised with a real buzz about it. It was also good to see Ray Day, part of the successful Bernard & Co-sponsored BIGGA delegation, carrying the Union Flag before the Banquet. They were terrific ambassadors for the Association during their time in Canada.

On the last day we were caught up in the Inception which had its centre in Seattle, less than 100 miles away.

I was in our hotel at the time and being typically British I went and looked out of the window only to see the office workers in the building opposite all rapidly moving away from the windows and down the stairs.

Last month I talked about my new career as a columnist. Well I’ve now become a TV celebrity as well — not once but twice. We got outside the hotel after the earthquake only for me to be grabbed by a local news crew and interviewed about what had happened. Buildings were moving about a foot up and down and it really was quite frightening. It had measured 6.8 at its epicentre in Seattle.

Arriving back home I had my second television appearance. Neil and I were interviewed for Sky Sports about BIGGA and greening matters generally. A great deal was left on the cutting room floor but I was pleased to have had the chance to make the point that nowadays the constant striving for pace on the greens is, in my opinion, not good for the greens or the greenkeepers. They inserted old black and white footage of a golfer from a previous generation putting on a green to highlight the point. It is good to see the Association gaining in credibility and recognition and appearing on television can only be positive for us.

Ironically the first picture they showed was of the wheels of my car being washed down with disinfectant because of the Foot and Mouth outbreak. Walton Health has been affected by Foot and Mouth as we are on common land. We had an enforced closure for a week and, as I write, have restrictions on access to the course.

The annual South East Region’s Gentleman’s Dinner was also a victim, the first time in living memory — 30 years — it has been postponed. I was hoping to have had the chance to thank the club for its support of the Dinner and the Association generally and also thank my staff for all the work they have done over the years to prepare the course for the arrival of so many greenkeepers and their guests. Hopefully it can be rearranged for later in the year.

Other cancellations included the GCSSA Conference I was due to attend in Ireland, and Westurf, and my thoughts go out to those, including Paula in the South West and South Wales, who had put so much work into these events only to see them fall victim to this horrendous disease.

Coming on the back of the flooding which caused course closures, the Foot and Mouth outbreak is another body blow to so many people, and we can only hope that it is halted soon and they can work towards getting back to some sort of normality.

On a positive note I was delighted to arrive home after my travels to discover that the team had already vertidrained the greens saving me a lot of grief as they can work towards getting back to some sort of normality.

And also thank my staff for all the work and being typically British I went and looked out of the window only to see the office workers in the building opposite all rapidly moving away from the windows and down the stairs.
