Meet the Man With the Plan

After 25 Years of Service to Turf Industry, Benham ‘Retires’ to FTGA
BY JOEL JACKSON, CGCS

Who is Don Benham and what is he doing here? Maybe you haven’t met him yet, but you must have seen his name in the Florida Turf Digest as the new director of public relations hired last year to help the FTGA strengthen ties with IFAS and to raise funds for turf research. But why Don Benham?

Benham recently had sold his company, Benham Chemical Company in Michigan, and retired to Sarasota with his wife Ruth. His unique qualifications include 25 years of working with the Michigan Turfgrass Association and Michigan State University doing the very same thing. It is a stroke of luck and perfect timing to be able to bring Benham on board to assist the FTGA grow stronger and more effective.

Everyone who serves as a volunteer board member of an association knows that it is often very difficult to devote quality time to pursuing the goals of a professional association when you have to take care of your primary business. Now the FTGA has someone who can spend that time building relationships and gaining trust of the entire network of the turf industry in Florida.

Benham’s first order of business has been to get to know all the people involved in the FTGA from the board members, the office staff and the administrators and faculty of the University of Florida’s IFAS operations. He has made it a point to learn the chain of command and the mission and goals of all parties concerned. And at the same time always looking for the common ground on which they all can stand and build a better working relationship.

Now Benham is moving into phase two: fund raising. After many years of successfully building up a multi-million dollar business, and helping the Michigan Turfgrass Association build up a self-sustaining research funding program, Benham is unveiling a modest, but pro-active campaign to get all stakeholders in the turf industry involved in a plan of regular funding, that is neither

Pioneering the Way Chemicals are Sold

Operating from an office consisting of a telephone, a card table and a lamp borrowed from his daughter’s dresser, Benham set out to overcome the skepticism of major chemical manufacturers toward his unique proposition: namely, that Benham Chemical could do a better job for them if it had the option of placing their products where they could best be used in that marketplace—in other words, representing them and their competitors.

By 1984 he had succeeded, to the point where other chemical companies adopted his idea.

Today Benham Chemical Corporation is generally credited with pioneering this change in the way chemicals are now sold to the Green Industry in Michigan. Offering customers the right product for their needs is the heart of Benham Chemical Corporation...”

Benham Founded Company With a Bold Plan

His idea was bold; to sell products from every major chemical manufacturer. What he had going for him was 18 years experience in the chemical business (he had headed L & E Chemicals of the Long Equipment Corp.) and faith he could build a business based on the idea of service. But, he had to convince the large chemical manufacturers he could serve them too, even though he would also be handling products from their competitors. Benham, a large man with sharp blue eyes and streaks of silver in his hair, is a good businessman. He’s also persuasive.

This August, Benham Chemical Co. celebrated its fifth year in business, its sales and office staff has grown from two to seven people, and the young company is anticipating a dollar sales volume of $3 million during 1984. Benham and his close-knit staff have built the company to the point that it receives annual recognition.

Benham credits several factors for the success of his company, not the least of which was his initial decision to sell service as well as products.

“Everybody is out trying to sell chemicals cheaper,” Benham said. “Of course we want to be competitive, but we want to sell the proper chemical for the proper job and for a proper profit. We are not always the cheapest place. We feel that service to the customer is more important than price and we feel most of our customers realize this. It takes time sometimes to convince people that they need service. Golf course superintendents recognize they need the service, but many lawn care customers take awhile to realize it. We didn’t build this business because we could sell it cheaper.”

Several major changes have occurred in the chemical business in the past five years and one of the most notable has been the rapid growth of the still relatively young lawn care industry.

“Our biggest increases in sales came from the lawn care market,” Benham said. “I didn’t expect it to be that strong.”

Initially 95 percent of Benham’s business was generated from golf courses, and although that continues to be a big part of his business (about 50 percent), the lawn care industry has literally taken off. What is remarkable, he feels, is that it occurred during the worst economic period in the Detroit/Toledo area area since the Depression.

“We grew during those periods when the industry went kaput, Benham said. The company met its first-year $550,000 sales goal and has made “significant increases” each year since. “We passed my five-year projection in the second year,” he added. In more recent years he’s been more accurate in predicting sales.

But, he continues to seek controlled expansion within his business area. “We have a lot more expansion and a lot more things to do in our own area, but we’re actually having to watch a little that we don’t grow too much and grow out of our location.”

“The manufacturers are getting smarter. They want to sell the background of the people selling their products…”
