Freeman's name. Memorial contributions may be made to University City Kiwanis Foundation, c/o Chris Dodd, 635 NE 1st Street, Gainesville, FL 32601.

Paul Bundschu, Turfgrass Publisher, Dies at Age 62

Paul Bundschu, president of Harvest Publishing Co., died at his Winter Haven home Oct. 13 following a brief illness. He was 62.

Harvest Publishing Co. publishes the Florida Turf Digest and North Carolina Turfgrass. The firm is a strategic affiliate of Janlark Communications, which manages the Florida Green. Harvest Publishing has assisted the Florida Turfgrass Association with planning and producing the last three annual conferences and shows and other special projects.

Mr. Bundschu had been a group publisher of agricultural magazines for Harcourt Brace Javonovich in the Midwest and Florida before founding Harvest Publishing Co. in 1993. He was a graduate of Cornell University with a bachelor of agriculture science degree.

Paul Bundschu was preceded in death by his daughter, Susan Horn. He is survived by his wife, Terri; sons Paul Bundschu Jr. (Joy), TJ Brablec (Candace) both of Winter Haven, and Steven Horn of Michigan; daughters Christy Davies (Robert) and Betsy Serviss, both of Buhl, Ida.; and six grandchildren.

In lieu of flowers, the family has requested donations to the Turfgrass Green Industry Memorial, 3008 E. Robinson St., Orlando, FL 32803.

The Rest of the Story

In the last issue the soft underbelly of the Ridge Chapter (Alan Puckett) was laid bare in a scathing expose of the infamous Ridge Rules of Golf. Just in case the other eleven chapters were feeling left out, the Florida Green received an unsolicited report in a plain brown wrapper containing formerly unknown secrets and some historical facts about the other chapters.

On our 30th anniversary and in alphabetical order:

Calusa - Still just a toddler in terms of age, the Calusa chapter had to make a name change already for their premier event, the art of growing turf on top of limestone, they may add legitimacy to the name. They hope growth continues because they are dependent on effluent irrigation. No new toilets, no irrigation water. This is also the only place where golf maintenance budgets have Dun and Bradstreet ratings.

North Florida - A chapter with a real identity crisis; it was founded as the Georgia-Florida Turfgrass Association in 1961. When Jacksonville built more golf courses than Jekyll Island, it became the Florida-Georgia GCSA. When Florida began to whine Georgia regularly in the annual Gator-Bulldog Tailgate Party, it became the North Florida GCSA, since the Georgia members refused to attend any more meetings on Florida soil. Go Crocodiles. Rumor: Ron Hill has been president of all three of the organizations.

Palm Beach - The county government has been in touch with the leaders of this chapter since 2000 after noting that the PBGCSA was able to hold annual elections and elect a new slate of officers without any recounts in its long history. In researching the success story of the chapter they did find one conspicuous by-law (Section II, sub paragraph 3 - There shall be no members with the name Chad). They also noted that the vote count was done by a show of hands. The chapter wisely did not specify which hand should be raised, thus keeping the process as simple and easy to execute as possible. The Palm Beach County elections supervisor, a female 18-handicapper, is reportedly demanding that the number of left-hand and right-hand votes be tallied. Look out 2004.

Ridge - Able to build on the mistakes of the older chapters, this chapter is the most honestly named chapter of the Dirty Dozen. The sandy ridge running up and down U.S. 27 is home to most of its courses. Their subsequent shortcomings were well documented in the last issue.

Seven Rivers - While this chapter grabs headlines every year by hosting the most successful turf research fundraising in the state, investigators have found they are masters of deception of almost Enron proportions. Advertised as the chapter with seven major rivers flowing through their region, evidence has surfaced indicating there are really eight rivers in the area and the chapter has knowingly lied to protect their favorite fishing holes along the Crystalacoochie River. Don't bother looking it up on the map. In fact, next time you unfold your road map, check out the name of the publisher, Bozelander, Inc. These guys have been logging record bass in the headwaters and trophy reds, snook and trout where it empties out in the Gulf of Mexico.

South Florida - This is the granddaddy of all chapters. Born in 1939, they spawned the South Florida Green magazine, which became the Florida Green when the state association was formed in 1980. I have nothing negative to report about the South Florida GCSA. They made me an offer I couldn't refuse.

Suncoast - Since all of Florida is a "Coast" this name doesn’t help identify where the chapter is located at all. However, a few buddies of Hernando DeSoto (Hugh Bebout, Royce Stewart and Jim Svabek) looking for the fountain of youth did find a place they called Manasota, which is an old Spanish word meaning, “You’re away,” which referred to how far they were from home. Since the Indians didn’t have a reciprocal arrangement with the Madrid County Club, these three adventurers built their own golf courses in Florida. The well-preserved remains of these pioneers are often on display at monthly chapter meetings.

Treasure Coast - Contrary to the belief of many, this chapter was not founded by Mel Fisher, famed treasure hunter. Many thought that since a few WWII relics and equipment used to practice for the Normandy invasion became exposed on the beaches, the area was named the Treasure Coast. Typical of superintendents not trying anything new unless someone else has done it first, they took the name that was already in use since there were no negative reactions. Only later did they find out that the Treasure name came from shipwrecked Spanish galleons, and now everybody thinks golf is only for the wealthy, and it’s all the Treasure Coast Chapter’s fault.

West Coast - Oddly enough for the second-oldest chapter in the state (1949), there are only two or three golf courses close to the beaches and none actually on the coast. Actually most of the courses are in the metropolitan areas surrounding Tampa and St. Petersburg. Did you ever wonder why there are so many old folks in St. Pete? Think about it: St. Peter at the golden gate. Next stop paradise. Then the yuppies bring in the Devil Rays. Talk about the conflict between good and evil. That conflict sometimes spills over into the golf world. I'll let you debate whether we are good or evil.