A TURF TRADITION
PGA National to be featured on TV show

PGA National GC in Palm Beach Gardens will be one of the courses featured in the PGA of America’s nationally syndicated TV program, PGA’s Golf Almanac.

In its third year, the series will expand from 10 to 13 seeks for each of the PGA’s 41 sections. The 30-minute shows will air in both Florida sections beginning the weekend of April 4 and ending June 27.

Arthur Weaver was unveiled during the annual meeting of the United States Golf Association in Palm Beach in February.

“It was an occasion I will always remember,” Jones said. “I was simply delighted with Arthur Weaver’s work and am honored the USGA will display it.”

It was the first of two February honors for the architect. He received the Don Rossi Humanitarian Award from the Golf Course Builders Association of America at the International Golf Course Conference and Show in New Orleans.

Jones’s portrait will hang at the USGA’s Museum, Golf House, in Far Hills, N.J. He becomes the 17th golf dignitary — and the first golf architect — honored with a portrait. Others include Bob Jones, Francis Ouimet, Ben Hogan, Byron Nelson, Gene Sarazen and Glenna Collett Vare. A selection of Arthur Weaver’s landscapes was exhibited at Golf House last summer. The museum is open from 9 to 5 weekdays and 10 to 4 on weekends.

ASGCA honors Paul Fullmer with 1992 Donald Ross Award

Paul Fullmer, who has guided the development of the American Society of Golf Course Architects for the past 22 years in his role of executive secretary, has been named the 1992 winner of the organization's Donald Ross Award.

“Paul has been at the helm during one of the most dynamic growth periods in the history of golf course architecture in this country,” President Tom Clark explained, “and his steady hand has enabled the society and its members to achieve recognition throughout the world as the premier design source. The Society has experienced rapid growth during the past decade and has become a high-profile member of the Allied Associations of Golf, and we wanted to recognize his consistent counsel and pro-active programs by awarding Paul the Ross Award — the highest honor we can bestow.”

Fullmer now joins others including Robert Trent Jones and Geoffrey Garnish as ASGCA recipients of the coveted Ross award. The ASGCA presents the Ross Award annually to someone who has made a significant contribution to the game of golf, and specifically golf course architecture.

Fullmer became ASGCA executive secretary in 1970. His golf connection developed through his wife, Sandra, and her father, Percy Clifford, who was an ASGCA Fellow and one of the leading golf course architects in Mexico.

"Quite simply, I am deeply honored by the Ross Award," Fullmer said.

"I am well aware that staff people seldom are recognized with their organization's highest honor, and this recognition certainly is one of the highlights of my life, especially because it comes from such great friends."

USGA presents C. Richard Skogley Green Section Award

A turfgrass breeder and educator responsible for several varieties of bentgrass and fescue, including Providence and Jamestown, was presented the USGA's 1992 Green Section Award at the International Golf Course Conference and Show in New Orleans Feb. 10-17.

"I'm very proud to receive the acknowledgement of my peers for my years of research in turfgrass," said Dr. C. Richard Skogley, who has spent most of his 40-year career as director of the University of Rode Island turfgrass program.

The award has been presented annually since 1961 to recognize distinguished service to golf through work with turfgrass.

An author or co-author of many articles for scientific journals and the public press, Skogley has been a featured speaker at turfgrass programs throughout the world.

He has received many honors, including the Oregon Seed Trade Association Man of the Year Award and the GCSAA Distinguished Service Award.

Skogley retired from URI in 1990 but he continues to provide consulting services.

USGA Foundation grants funding to youth golf programs

A Florida-based program to introduce underprivileged youngsters in 125 cities around the nation to golf has received a grant from the USGA Foundation.

"Hook-a-Kid-on-Golf," run by the National Youth Sports Coaches Association based in West Palm Beach, and the LPGA/American Athletic Foundation Junior Golf Program in Anaheim, Calif., which will teach the game to disadvantaged youths in Southern California.

Both received major funding from the USGA series of grants designed to assist in developing youth and education programs.

Several programs for physically challenged golfers also received support this year, including Special Olympics International; Fore Hope, Inc., of Columbus, Ohio; National Amputee Golf Association, of Amherst, N.H.; and the Physically Limited Golfers Association in Duluth, Minn. Funds for these programs were raised through USGA sales of greeting cards in 1991.

The National Minority Junior Golf Scholarship Association, in Phoenix, Ariz., was awarded a grant to assist with its scholarship program for financially disadvantaged high school golfers.

Golf Ventures
a complete line of golf course products
Joe Ondo, CGCS, is a working superintendent. With four full-time employees and three part-timers, he maintains the 18-hole, 5,400-yard Winter Pines Golf Course, a par-67 public facility that gets 90,000 rounds a year. He's a part-time mechanic and spray technician, and a full-time member of the crew.

And he wouldn’t have it any other way.

“Everybody can’t be at the prestigious places,” says the 39-year-old Ohio native and 1975 graduate of Lake City Community College’s School of Golf Course Operations.

“I enjoy not having to be in the office all day. I not only get to see my golf course up close and personal every day, I get the chance to do something about it. You see things when you’re riding the spayer that you wouldn’t see while making an inspection tour.

“What we have is a good, everyday golf course for good, everyday golfers.”

And Ondo, with a three handicap and several state championships under his belt, is a pretty good everyday golfer himself. He learned to play golf at 15, when a public course, Bronzwood...
Golf Club owned by James and Natalie Bronson, was constructed across the street from his Kinsman, Ohio, home. Kinsman is about 50 miles east of Cleveland and not much further southwest of Erie, Pa., home of the current Winter Pines owners.

After watching the course grow in, Joe and his dad thought golf might be fun. So they walked across the street and tried it. They liked it... and became pretty good at it.

The Bronson’s son, Carl, was Joe’s age. Soon the two teenagers were tearing up the local junior tournaments.

After high school, Carl Bronson (now superintendent at East Lake Woodlands GC in Palm Harbor, Fla.) went to Lake City Community College while Ondo entered Youngstown State University on a golf scholarship.

“I thought I knew a lot about math until I started taking engineering courses,” Ondo recalls. “I changed my major to physical education.”

Although he toyed with the notion of becoming a golf professional, Ondo dismissed the idea because “I didn’t have the resources. Sponsors weren’t readily available back then.”

So he followed his buddy, Carl, to Lake City, and graduated with the class of 1975. He then landed the assistant’s job at Sharon (Pa.) CC. In the fall of 1978, he came to Florida as assistant to John Lapikas at Lost Tree Club in North Palm Beach. Six months later, he took the Winter Pines post. There was an Erie connection.

Lapikas had been superintendent at Winter Pines before moving to posh Lost Tree and the Winter Pines owners were “seven guys from Erie, Pa.,” near Ondo’s hometown and the wellspring of Ondo’s career in golf.

“It was a different world, that’s for sure,” said Ondo, comparing Winter Pines to Lost Tree. “Down there, everybody was under scrutiny every moment. Every member was everybody’s boss. At Winter Pines, we have only the owner to satisfy.”

As a public golf course operated for profit, Winter Pines could not be described as “manicured.” But it gets as much tender loving care as the staff and budget will allow.

“It’s not a difficult course to maintain,” says Ondo “but it takes quite an effort to get everything done before each weekend, particularly when we try to make it at least a little bit better every week. We put in a lot of 10-hour days.”

At Winter Pines, as at most public courses, weekends are the source of profits and profits are the source of funds for improvements.

“We pretty much gear up for weekends,” Ondo says.

One of the things that helps the profit picture at Winter Pines is free treated sewage effluent from the city of Winter Park.

“It’s a good deal for the city because we are getting rid of the effluent at no cost to the city and it’s a good deal for us, too.” Ondo says. In the future, the golf course may pay some of the energy costs of treating and pumping the effluent.

At 5,400 yards, the Winter Pines is short, but not as easy as it looks, says Ondo, a former Florida Publinx GA state champion and member of the FGCSA national team several times.

As a concession to maintenance economy and speed of play, Winter Pines has only 21 bunkers, but three lakes and a canal...
ORTHENE® will keep unwanted pests off your turf.

Trying to control a broad range of tough turf pests like mole crickets, fire-ants, fleas, chinch bugs and the worm complex is no day at the beach. That’s why you should use ORTHENE®

ORTHENE kills both on contact and with long-lasting systemic action, and can be applied to lawns, ornamentals, shrubs, even trees. You can also combine ORTHENE with many miticides and fungicides for more effective pest and disease control with just one application.

ORTHENE is waterproof within 24 hours, and its chemical structure allows it to break down quickly, eliminating the threat of harmful buildup in the soil.

Throw a party your toughest turf pests will never recover from, with ORTHENE Turf, Tree and Ornamental Spray.

THROW A KILLER LAWN PARTY.
bring water into play on 12 holes and a tree-planting program has tightened the course into a challenge. Three par-threes are longer than 200 yards.

"There's not a lot of room out there. You've got to score well on the front side if you want to leave happy," he says.

"Of course, there aren't too many courses where you can shoot 12 over par and still break 80," Ondo adds. "A lot of golfers like that."

If Ondo is a working superintendent at a working man's golf course, he is thoroughly professional, with the complete support of owner Ed McMillin (another resident of Erie, Pa., who bought the course eight years ago) and his son Jon, the course manager and Ondo's boss.

"Every time I have the opportunity to learn something, they are willing to let me. In fact, they encourage me to attend all the seminars and workshops," he says.

In 1986 Ondo was one of the first golf course superintendents in central Florida to become certified. And he has served the FGCSA for years as a director (external vice president of the Central Florida GCSA) and as golf chairman.

Between his professional responsibilities and his passion for golf, there is little time for other recreational activities.

"Weekend golf tournaments are pretty much our vacations," says Ondo, who gets (and takes) three weeks of vacation every year. Taking long walks with Kathy, his wife of eight years, is a major source of relaxation.

"There is not a private club atmosphere here," Ondo says. "And I like that. I like knowing that we're doing the best job we can do and the fact that we are helping all kinds of people—from kids to senior citizens—enjoy themselves and this great game. "I'm happy."
