Landmark woes could affect entire golf industry sort of niche lenders, so I don’t think it will hurt us. But the Landmark situation will have a generally negative effect.”

The La Quinta-based firm is desperately seeking to keep its prized possessions — PGA West, Kiawah Island, Carmel Valley Ranch and Mission Hills CC, to name a few — out of the hands of the Resolution Trust Corporation. Landmark’s plan of action is a 10-year program that would use future sales of memberships and real estate to pay off current holdings.

Federal Judge Falcon Hawkins has lent a sympathetic ear. On Oct. 30, 1991, he ruled that RTC agents don’t have the right to replace directors and managers overseeing Landmark properties. However, a few short weeks ago, the 4th Circuit Court of Appeals overturned Hawkins’ ruling. When Golf Course News went to press, Landmark officials were mulling an appeal while RTC officials searched for potential buyers.

“I don’t have the exact numbers, but they are clearly over-leveraged. A lot of people were still are,” Sawyer explained. “I’m not a lawyer,” he said, “but I see the situation as an example of over-regulation, and Landmark got caught in the middle. They are a successful developer and manager of high-quality golf courses and resorts.

Unfortunately, they were so successful they started an S&L. Then Uncle Sam decides S&Ls can’t own commercial properties and Landmark is stuck.”

Those changes in federal regulations, which took place in 1988, forced Landmark to seek buyers for some of its properties. Here again, circumstances and the company’s unique development practices made for a less-than-ideal scenario.

“One of the major problems for the potential buyer was that Landmark sold a lot of lifetime memberships that are good at all these different properties,” Sawyer explained. “If you’re a potential buyer, are you going to swallow that?”

AGC buys oldest U.S. public course

BRONX, N.Y.—American Golf Corp. has acquired Van Cortlandt Golf Course, a municipal facility here.

Van Cortlandt Golf Course, a par 70 with a slope rating of 110, is the oldest public golf course in the United States. The course was built in 1893.

“We are looking forward to providing golfers with a top-of-the-line facility,” said Kimble Knowliden, senior vice president for AGC. “Van Cortlandt Golf Course is certainly a landmark course in the New York area.”

While golfers sleep, you don’t.
Because a superintendent doesn’t just work from nine to five. Your course is a 24 hour concern.

We see things your way. So we don’t measure the performance of Toro equipment solely in terms of horsepower and rpms. We measure it in your terms.
